Sergt. Alexander Arch, Indiana Soldier, Fired First Shot of the War

New York, Sept. 9.—It was Sergeant Alexander L. Arch, of the Sixth Field Artillery of the American Expeditionary Forces, who fired America's first shot across the German lines. Certain newspapers have given credit for that historic act to Corporal De Varillo, a soldier who was sent to this country for a Liberty Loan campaign.

Floyd Gibbons, the war correspondent, yesterday confirmed Sergeant Arch's statement that he fired the first shot. While Mr. Gibbons was not with Arch's battery when that first shot was fired, he was with another battery in the immediate vicinity and took pains to get all details of the first shot.

"I was with the Sixth Field Artillery for something like six weeks," said Mr. Gibbons, "adjoining it while it was in training, because I wanted to be right there when that first shot was fired. I attached myself to A Battery, on the assumption that the A Battery would be the first in action, with B and C Batteries following in that order."

"There was so much rivalry among the three batteries, however, for the honor of the first shot, that while the men of the A Battery were digging gun pits for themselves, the men of C Battery, working like Trojans and pulling through mud that was waist deep, took advantage of some old gun pits left by the French and got into position first."

That was Arch's battery, and Arch, Alexander Arch, a swarthy, ruddy man, with a mustache, inserted the shell, pulled the lanyard and extracted the shell. This took place on October 3, 1917, in the Lunenburg sector in the territory that was old Germany.

MANGIN'S ARMY ON HEELS OF THE HUNS

struggle of five days during which five different German divisions tried to hold off a single French division. "The divisions that tried to prevent the crossing of the canal and river," The Associated Press correspondent was informed by a French officer, who had participated in most of the campaigns of the war, "accomplished the greatest concentration of machineguns that has been witnessed in this war."

French Face Machineguns
The French troops were obliged to face that fire at a range of twenty yards in order to cross the Quatre-Allies canal and the river Ailette. Pioneers throwing bridges over the canal seventeen yards wide suffered not only from the quick fire but were in good range of German grenades. It required two days to advance to the Ailette from the village Pont Saint Mard and four days to gain 500 yards of ground. The machineguns were passed thickly all along the canal in front of Quincy and in the woods, thickets and marshes.

French Sergeant Takes 12
The French engineers finally succeeded in bridging the canal and over the first bridge an enraged sergeant charged the Germans around a machinegun position and single-handed, made twelve of them prisoner. Such was the work that went on both along the river and the canal during the five days, each day exhausting Germany's best divisions. Twenty-two quick fire were found in a small thicket called Etouratsaie wood. They were almost all thick in the wood and the more extensive timbered land fronting Coucy-le-Chateau and Coucy-la-Ville. Where the French could get at them they charged and killed the German gunners on their pieces, but many emplacements were too well hidden or protected for a direct attack and it was necessary to shell them.

Enemy Leaves Guns Behind
During several hours French projectiles sent splinters flying all through the timber and when the infantry charged they had to go on to the river to catch the enemy who had left leaving his guns and an enormous amount of materials and supplies behind. Coucy-la-Chateau and the height on which it stands thus was turned over to the north and flanked at the same time from the south, while thousands of shells filled the ruins of the surrounding positions. Chateau de Nogent, to the southeast was taken about the same time and with it the Germans lost positions on which they had spent a tremendous effort. They retreated behind the three lines of barbed wire on the line to Fresno. The booty they left behind in two immense engineering dumps included locomotives, railroad material of all sorts and the great number of quick fire and emplacement guns and one 15-inch gun with which they had bombarded French towns far behind the lines east of the Ailette.

Hun Shell Hits Hut of Y.M.C.A.; Leader Safe

New York, Sept. 9.—The following dispatch was received yesterday at the office of the National Y. M. C. A. from the Paris bureau of that organization:

"Exploding at the door of a Y. M. C. A. hut at the front, a 155-millimeter high-explosive shell killed or wounded several soldiers last week, but failed to injure Thomas S. Barber, of Utica, N. Y., the Red Triangle secretary in charge, who for the twelfth time thus escaped unscathed. On eleven preceding occasions the Y. M. C. A. charge were struck by shells, none of which 'had his number on it.' For months throughout the great drive this Y. M. C. A. worker, formerly a Ulica merchant, has been in the line of the most dangerous posts held by his division of the association. At one town his hut was hit eight times, while another was hit three times."

Belvidere Brooks Is Killed in Action

New York, Sept. 9.—Captain Belvidere Brooks, general manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, was killed on August 22 by a shell in a German attack west of Flannes. Captain Brooks was 30 years old, and was graduated in 1909 at Williams College, where he was captain of the football team. He was commissioned at the first Plattsburg Camp, and shortly before going overseas was married to a daughter of Frank Rogers, of the Standard Oil Company. He lived at 129 East Eighty-second street.

Fonck Not Satisfied With Three Victims

Paris, Sept. 9.—A characteristic story is told of Lieutenant Fonck's exploit in bringing down three German machines on August 14. Although Fonck is officially credited with sixty victories, he really has brought down ninety-seven enemy machines since his first, which dates from August, 1916. Fifty-seven of the ninety-seven have fallen in flames.

The young Lieutenant on August 14 was at the head of a patrol some miles within the German lines when he saw four enemy chaser planes approaching. The encounter was lightninglike. After a few shots from Fonck, the first German plane plunged to the ground in flames, and it was soon followed by the second machine. Fonck did not have time to fire on the third German airplane, but the fourth began its fatal fall before the first had reached the ground.

When Fonck landed, his comrades, who had heard the news by telephone, crowded around him to extend their congratulations, but he showed no elation whatever. "Bravo, Fonck! Three at one blow!" came from every side. There was silence for a moment, and then, with a certain regret, Fonck replied: "Not a word! There were four!"

AUTOMOBILE HIT BY VALLEY TRAIN

Mrs. Earl Adams and Children Have Narrow Escape at New Kingston Crossing

Mechanicsburg, Pa., Sept. 9.—What might have been a serious accident occurred on Saturday morning, when the five-passenger car driven by Mrs. Earl Adams, with her two small children, was struck at the Cumberland Valley Railroad crossing at the New Kingston station by the eastbound passenger train which arrives at Mechanicsburg at 8.58 o'clock.

The Adams family live only a short distance from the station, and because Mr. Adams was away helping a friend in business and the children, started for the place for guests who were to spend the day with them. It is said the tagman was not at the crossing, and Mrs. Adams, not hearing the train, ran directly in front of it, and had almost cleared the tracks when the rear part of the car was struck by the engine and the occupant hurled out. None, however, was seriously injured. Ross, the two-year-old boy, was thrown a distance of about forty-five feet, according to a witness, but landed on a grass plot, and was badly cut about the face. Cora, the five-year-old girl, escaped with scarcely any injury, and Mrs. Adams is suffering from bruises and nerve shock. The train brought the family to Mechanicsburg, where their injuries were dressed by Dr. Hersher. The back of the car was smashed. As soon as the engineer saw the car he applied the brakes, but not in time to prevent hitting it.
