Poor Woman Makes Sacrifice

"For years I have doctored for indigestion and severe bloating with gas, all my money had gone for doctors and medicine which did me no good. I had lost all faith in medicines and as I have to work hard for the few dollars I earn, was afraid to risk any more money. A year ago my neighbor told me to try Mayr's Wonderful Remedy. I have found it to be the best medicine in the world and am glad I made the sacrifice." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded.

Germans Quitting Laon, Admit Losing the War

With the French Army in the Laon Area, Oct. 18.—The first news that reached the inhabitants of Laon of the radical change in the military situation came from German officers who had, after the victories of the Allies, already ceased to agree with the Berlin military critics, whose articles proclaiming Germany unbeaten are now being circulated by wireless. With an utter lack of caution which the hearer took as a betrayal of despair, these officers opened their minds and bared their hearts in the presence of people who had felt their oppression for four years.

Before a man in whose house they were billeted, German officers declared: "The Central Empires are no longer able to stand out against the whole world. Hard times are in store for the Fatherland unless peace is obtained promptly. Without a word of regret for oppression of the people whose roofs had sheltered them, they talked with uncontrived anguish of the possibility that their own people might also feel the hardships of invasion. The direct confessions of defeat, contradicting the reports of the Berlin writers that the German retreat was purely a tactical retirement, are supported by material facts not open to controversy, such as 4,000 cannon captured during the three months of the Allied offensive, or about one-fourth of the entire armament of the German artillery, and 250,000 prisoners taken during the same time on the western front alone.

Milner Discusses Coming Surrender

London, Oct. 18.—Lord Milner, the British Secretary for War, interviewed by The Evening Standard, said that complete victory was in sight, namely the destruction of the Prussian military machine. It was a serious mistake, Lord Milner declared, to imagine that the German people were in love with militarism. When the German people saw the complete and ignominious defeat of militarism and realized that that system had brought them ruin, they would be as eager to do away with it as the Allies.

Lord Milner said that the utter wreckage of the Prussian military machine might be achieved either by a complete and decisive victory leading to unconditional surrender, or by an armistice under such conditions as to guarantee that the military supremacy of the Allies should not be weakened. He regarded the armistice, under such conditions, as certain to be attended by the realization of Allied war aims, and was therefore anxious that nothing be done to postpone its accomplishment. He was inclined to think that if the Allies at the present time attempted to dictate to Germany certain drastic changes in their own government as regards the Constitution and personnel, the resistance of the German armies would be stiffened.
