are usually covered with a layer of stones. Unlike the bass and pickered the catish are non-cannabilistic, protecting instead of lunching upon their offspring. The Silurida family of catish are really a table delicacy. They were named after the night prowling felines on account of their prowling felines on account of their long barbels or feelers about their mouths, resembling the whiskers of a cat. Heads are large with a wide mouth, eyes are very small, they are covered with a smooth scaleless, slippery skin. The Mississippi river produces specimens four to six feet in length, weighing fifty to 125 pounds. Usually causht in bait nets, by fishermen, and they command top price on the iish market as food. The small channel or silver catish known to fishermen as "fiddlers" or "musicians" must not be confused with "horned pouts" or "buil heads." Egypt has a catish which swims in reversed position, the belly upward. When alarmed they immediately revert to their normal position to escape more rapidly.

Immediately above the little city of Kelthsburg, Ill., a railroad bridge had been constructed across the Mississippi river. Wing dams had been run out from both main shores, forcing the water through a limited channel under the draw span, creating a rapid current below the bridge, a deep channel which was a mecca for catish of all sizes. Handlining was a favorite fishing pastine at this point. With my friend, O. H. Lloyd, we had fine success landing "idelers," our combination pait of liver and chicken intestines was seductive. Our heal, Jine was finally assailed, a quet jerk, a steady pull and we set the hook. The fight wason. This silvered beauty showed his towing strength, our anchor up, he rushed

The fighting channel catfish of the Mississippi river. Holden in his book on Big Game Fish of the United on Big Game Fish of the United States ignores the channel cat as a game fish. The male is a real caretaker and defender of their young, guarding their nests and eggs, which are usually covered with a layer of stones. Unlike the bass and pickerel the catfish are non-cannabilistic, protections.

Mr. Maccabe has had two months, experience with the boys at Las Casas. The majority of the soldiers at the big cantonment never played games before the Training Camp Commission inaugurated sports at the Porto Rican camp, Now they are playing baseball and football, and are boxing and wrestling, with the same enthusiasm that characterizes the soldiers of "the States."

"Aside from the mere fun of the thing," says Mr. Maccabe, "these games bring muscles into play that promote agility in their move-thing," says Mr. Maccabe, "these games bring muscles into play that promote agility in their movements. Boxing lays the foundation for the skillful use of the bayonet when it comes to the real work of war. All games tend to develop the morale of the men and keep them cheerful."
