

Yanks View Old Castles Without Bating an Eye London.—You can't awe a Yank. You can feast his eye and his mind on history and castles and things that are so old they are sacred. But you can't awe him. You can, as has been done for instance, take him to Warwick Castle and show him the moat, the portcullis, Caesar's Tower and wonders that date from 900 A. D. Then when he sees the broad rampart on the castle wall he thinks what a fine place it would be to dance; and he does. This autumn a hundred Yanks made a two-day tour partly under the auspices of the American Y. M. C. A. and several of the other agencies which have joined in the United War Work Campaign for $170,500,000. They played baseball at the home of the late William Shakespeare, Stratford-on-Avon; visited Leamington Spa, Coventry, Warwick Castle and the ruins of the famous Kenilworth Castle. Just to add a sort of finishing American touch to the tour, they had peanuts at sacred Warwick. But lest the Yanks be falsely accused of carrying peanuts to Warwick let it be noted that Gordon Selfridge, a former Chicagoan, now a department store man in London, sent up 50 pounds of the delectable good-borders just to make the boys feel at home while gallivanting about the castle's moats and ramparts and towers and places. The soldiers were shown through the castle by their hostess, Mrs. H. Marsh. They saw the armor worn when knights were bold; they saw wonderful tapestries from 1604; priceless originals by such artists as Van Dyke, Hans Holbein, Rubens, Hobbday, Velasquez and what struck them as a picture of a funny little fat King, namely, Holbein's portrait of Henry the Eighth. And to get straight on Henry's many wives they learned the little rhyme: Divorced, beheaded, died; The visit was made on a Sunday. After the visit about the castle the Y. M. C. A. conducted vesper services on the lawn.
