REPUBLICANS ARE HANDICAPPED IN AFTER-WAR PLAN

Minority in Congress See the Need of Reconstruction, but Cannot Act

Washington, D. C., Nov. 2. — While it is generally accepted here that the future of the nation after the war has every possibility of unexampled prosperity. Republican leaders in both Houses of Congress think the time has come to spread out legislative safeguards that will insure it. They realize that it is not enough merely to win a military victory over the enemy in Europe, but that it will be equally necessary now to underwrite, as it were, the fruits of that victory.

For instance, it is accepted as invividual in the war the United States will have in commission, under lease and building, a large share of the ship tonnage of the world. The United States will have been less harmed by the war than any of the European nations, and will enter the era of peace with great commercial advantages over those nations. Moreover, many of the nations of Europe will be in debt to this nation and this credit balance will give us a commercial edge unless we throw it away through some inexcusable foily.

Republican Senators fear if immediate steps are not taken to meet the Reconstruction problem that peace may find the nation unable to readjust itself quickly enough to secure all the advantage that should accrue from it.
