"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER XLII
When supper was cleared away Neal made a suggestion. "Let's go out and buy up a florist's shop and send it to Jim's sisters. Shall we, Babbs?"

"I've five dollars left from the ten you gave me. Shall we spend it all?" I asked, with emotions that were so extravagant they needed their own explanation.

Neal's face turned scarlet. "No, you don't! Blake paid the check last night, so I've still got four-fifths of the five you loaned me. Let's see—tomorrow's Wednesday and payday is Saturday. I can walk to work and lunch on a chocolate frost and a sandwich the next three days; so a dollar will be a safe margin to keep out for brother Neal. Come on, skip around lively, and get ready, Babbs—we'll make a bit with those Harrissons yet."

I slipped on a hat and we hurried to the florist's over on the avenue. There in great glee we purchased a blue vase full of red dahlias and wild yellow "baby orchids." But when I came to write the card there, maliciously, in my own handwriting these innocent-looking words stared up at me:

"With loving greetings to Virginia and Phoebe from Barbara Anne and Neal."

But that simple message put into words the dividing line I hated to recognize—on one side the Harrissons, on the other "Barbara Anne and Neal." Two families—my husband's and mine. Virginia had made it sadly plain this very day that she didn't regard me as her "Own." I was an outsider to be treated with grave formality—not a sister to go down on her apartment hunt, to be asked over to dinner on her first night in town.

With a heart the heavier, because its pain must be hidden from Neal, I left the florist shop to which we had so early gone and walked home again through the early darkness. When we got back to the apartment Neal began to fumble about the room a bit restlessly.

"Do you think Jim will be home soon?" he asked.

I understood. His ardent youth hated being confined to our little apartment. He had given me of his best in a high-tide of boyish devotion but now he wanted to get out and have a little fun after his day's work. I knew this as well as if he had put it into words.

"Jim will be home by 2," I declared, remembering my husband had said the agent was going to show them the apartments between 7 and 8. "You run along to a movie, Neal."

"I'm not going to leave you, Babbs," declared Neal, slipping his tie a bit tighter in unconscious preparation for going out, even as he spoke.

"Nonsense, laddie! You know I haven't had a minute with Jim to-day, and it would be almost a kindness—"

Then, in great relief at his legitimate excuse for doing what he desired, Neal seized his hat and came and gave me a bear hug, crying:

"That's right, Babbs. You always tell me when I'm in the way, or I won't feel I've the right to stay here," and he bolted out of the place.

I smiled with tears in my eyes. I would never forget how Neal had stood by me this spring. It had made me very happy. But as the minutes passed and Jim didn't come, all happiness went from me. It was long after ten when my husband returned. The very first words he said were these:

"Where's that selfish young cub? Couldn't he stay home with his sister one evening?"

"I sent him out, Jim," I said colorfully, waiting for Jim to come and tip up my chin for his kiss.

But Jim dropped into a chair near the door.

"I'm dead tired," he said.

Then I took refuge in cold sarcasm:

"Oh, indeed! You weren't too tired to run around town with your sister. So I should think you might find enough energy to walk across the room and greet your wife."

Jim laughed—but there was an ugly earnestness in that laugh:

"Well, neither of us seems to have much energy to spare, or you might have had sense enough to go over to the Rocabanau some time today."

"I phoned!" I flamed in self-defense. "You said I should phone!"

"Phoned?" mimicked Jim. "My dear Anne, there are certain decencies in civilized society. My sisters come home from a year in the West, and for reasons we won't go into, I cannot offer them the hospitality of my home. It seems to me that my wife would, naturally and without suggestion from me, think of some way of welcoming them to their home town."

"I didn't think Virginia wanted me. She wasn't very cordial."

"Are you criticizing Virginia's manners?" asked Jim, incisively. "Really, Anne, that's very amusing, to say the least. I didn't find it so funny I might be angry. Virginia is as you would do well to remember, dearer to me than—"

"Than your wife herself!" I stormed wildly. I was on my feet now. I had backed against the table and was leaning heavily on it, with my clenched hands held forcibly at my sides. My chest heaved and I had great trouble to keep my breath from bursting out in hoarse gasps.

"Anne, do you think you can manage to do without making a scene?" he asked in what I took to be a bored tone.

"But you don't love me. You care more for Virginia than—"

Jim laid his hands on the arm of the chair and fairly pushed himself to his feet. He limped heavily as he crossed the room and stood towering over me with eyes ablaze.

"Virginia is my sister—no one can touch our love for each other. It's been part of us since we were children. But you are my wife—choose you from all the world, if I hadn't loved you why should I have married you?" he asked grimly.

"Why, indeed? What has it brought to Jim but love? Tenderness swept over me. Then came terror—terror lest by my own deed I lose that love."

"Jim, Jim, darling—forgive me. I've been a stupid, jealous goose! But I'll make up for it—I'll go down on my knees to Virginia if you say so. You sisters shall be sisters, too, Jim. I sobbed—my pride broken. "Only love me, darling! Love me, love me!"

I flung my arms about him pleadingly—and Jim drew me close. He laid his lips on my mouth. And I knew that he was mine again—that moment Virginia didn't count.

MINISTERS TO AID WAR WORK

For contributions to the United War Fund.

The meeting is open to the public. No admission or tickets will be required, but Mr. Gilbert has given fair warning that those who arrive first are the only ones who can be guaranteed a place in the auditorium, an interest in Mr. Morgenthau's appearance is running high.

Ambassador to Turkey

Mr. Morgenthau was ambassador in Turkey from 1913 until America's entrance into the war. He has a thorough insight into the conditions in the Ottoman empire that led up to the recent surrender. He was in Turkey when German agents were conspiring to the empire's aid in the war and has a most interesting tale to tell.

Former Ambassador Morgenthau is noted as a businessman, lawyer, and diplomat. Born in Mannheim, Germany, in 1856, he came to New York in 1885, where he was graduated from the University of the City of New York, and the Columbia Law School. At various times he has been president of the Central Realty Bond and Trust Company, Head of the Realty Company, Mount Sinai Hospital, Bronx Home Settlement, Free Synagogue in New York, director of the Underwood Typewriter Company, and a member of the law firm of Latham, Morgenthau and Goldsmith.

Members of the industrial committee to-day are canvassing the city's industries to secure subscriptions from the employers and employees. A number of large subscriptions are understood to have been received, but no reports will be made until the luncheon meeting of the committee captains in the Harrisburg Club at noon Monday.

The solicitors are appealing for large subscriptions, interesting contractors to the official mind in Washington, with the fact that the United War Campaign eliminates six separate drives.

After destroying the bridge from Stenay to Luneville, the enemy flooded the locks of the canal and flooded the river to a width of about two-thirds of a mile.

With the American Army Northwest of Verdun, Nov. 5.—Hidden away in almost the exact geometrical center of the Argonne forest far behind the present American lines, is a position—called by the French at the outset of the war "donkey's head"—which, because of the magnitude of the operations along the wide front, thus far has escaped special mention.

According to unofficial dispatches late in 1914, it took the Germans months to capture this veritable fortress from the French. It is one of the glorious, though heretofore unwritten, chapters in American military history that the doughboys swept over and past this place in a few days, and wrested from the enemy without great difficulty a position that might well be considered invulnerable.

With the American Forces in Northern Russia, Nov. 5.—Many of the American soldiers forming a contingent of the Russo-Allied forces received their baptism of fire twenty-four hours after they had left their train at this little village.

One little company of Americans had scarcely walked into an outpost here, relieving a squad of Frenchmen, when the Bolsheviks gave them a welcome of shrapnel bouquets.

310,000 More Men Are Called to Service by the Provost Marshal General

Washington, Nov. 5.—Provost Marshal General Crowder to-day called for 15,300 draft registrants physically qualified for limited service to entrain for camps between November 25 and 27. Voluntary enlistments will be accepted until November 20.

Total calls for military service for November now have passed the 310,000 mark and are far in excess of previous monthly mobilization under the draft.

The terms of the armistice with Austria were announced to the House of Commons to-day by Premier Lloyd George.

Bolshevik Troops Haven't Sand to Fight the Czechs

Moscow, Nov. 5.—Russian papers estimate the actual fighting strength of the Czech-Slovak detachments since they have recruited Cossacks and other enemies of the Bolshevik government at from 200,000 to 500,000.

Commanders of the Russian Red army insist they have been greatly outnumbered at the points where they have been repulsed by Czech-Slovak forces, but papers in opposition to the Bolshevik government charge the Czech-Slovak victories to the cowardice and lack of discipline in the Red army.

The Best Cough Syrup Is Home-made

Here's an easy way to save $2, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that this could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will quickly earn it a permanent place in your home.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the pint. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you a full pint of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this remedy usually in 24 hours or less, it seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Splendid for throat tickle, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded.

AMERICANS FACE GERMAN FIRE

the heavily wooded and very difficult ground east of the river, between Clerly and Briouilles, a two-and-one-half-mile front.

Americans To Be Pouilly
The town of Pouilly, in the bend of the Meuse northwest of Stenay, was captured by the Americans operating west of the Meuse. The west bank of the river now held in its entirety as far north as Pouilly. The troops which crossed to the east bank of the Meuse found their advance opposed by bitter machine gun and artillery fire. This was overcome, however, and the Americans are making steady progress.

Stenay Nearly Surrounded
The village of Beaumont, directly west of Pouilly, has been taken by the Germans, who now hold it from the heights which they held below the town. The important town of Stenay, across the Meuse to the southeast, is now half surrounded.

The Americans early to-day began clearing out Lattinay wood, in the bend of the Meuse southwest of Pouilly and this afternoon the wood was in their possession.

German Fleet Across Meuse
German troops who had remained west of the Meuse began to flow across the river early to-day along the line north and south of Stenay.
