THE PLOTTERS

A New Serial of East and West
By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER LXI
Douglas Wade seconded his sister's efforts to put the Pole at ease. "Good evening, Talak," he said. "You remember you told me you wanted to talk to Miss Wade, and I told you she was ill? Well, you see she is able to be out again now." "Dat's good," the man mumbled. "There was an awkward pause while the new arrival shuffled his feet on the gravel and twisted his battered cap about in his hands. "You wanted to talk to me about something?" Elizabeth queried. "Why not sit down there on the steps? Then we can chat more comfortably." He glanced at her wonderingly, yet with a look of gratitude that she saw even in the dim light. "With a nod, Douglas turned and went into the house, and as the sound of his footsteps died away the Pole spoke abruptly. "Mr. Butler, he give me money. Where is he?" Elizabeth replied promptly, pressing her hands together. "In jail." The man stared convulsively. "De older gentleman said he's arrested and couldn't come here. He didn't tell me he's in jail." "That is where they put him for killing Mr. Chapin," the girl said humbly. "Killing Mr. Chapin," the Pole gasped. "Yes," Elizabeth went on. "You and I know, Talak, that Mr. Butler did not kill Mr. Chapin. But he will be punished for it." There was a tense silence, then the even voice continued. "Mr. Butler will be killed unless the man who shot Amos Chapin confesses." "The words were sudden and unexpected, and the listener scarcely suppressed an exclamation of consternation. There was a subdued rustle at the window, then silence. "How did you do it, Talak?" "The question was uttered so casually that the listening physician wondered at this girl's self-possession. "With Old Chapin's gun," "Where did you get it?" "He kept it in a closet in the house. I seen him put it dere de night after he shot Nig. I watched to see, 'cause I wanted to kill him like he killed Nig." "But you did not have the gun when Mr. Butler and I met you on that afternoon that you went away from here," the girl said. "Yes I did, too. I put it in de bushes when Mr. Butler call me." "There was a long silence. Then, "Where is the gun now?" the girl asked softly. "I hid it. I did not want folks to know I killed old Chapin. But I can't let Mr. Butler stay in de jail, or get killed for me. Dat's why I tell you. You get him out of jail. He can tell de police I done de shooting." "Suppose," the girl ventured hopefully, "that you tell my brother to tell Mr. Butler, I am not well enough to go into Midland yet. Douglas," she called before Talak could protest, "will you come out here, please? Talak has something to say to you, and something he wishes you to attend to for him." All sense of personal danger seemed to have left the Pole. Elizabeth had been right when she said he was capable of but one idea at a time. As Douglas appeared in the doorway, the self-confessed murderer spoke doggedly. "I killed old Chapin," he repeated. "Tell my brother all about it, Talak," Elizabeth urged. "What will he do to me?" Talak asked suspiciously. Douglas stepped close to him and laid his hand on the poor misshapen man's shoulder. "I will not hurt you my man," he so suddenly that he dislodged the physician's hand. "I don't care if you do!" he exclaimed passionately, springing up from the lower step on which he was seated. "I'm glad I shot old Chapin! He killed Nig—and he kept my pay. Nobody wants me for work, 'cause I can't work fast. I'm hungry and I ain't got no place to stay nights!" His voice rose in the peculiar strident and unmodulated tone peculiar to the mentally deficient. "There, there, Talak," Wade soothed. "Never mind! We won't talk about it any more." "You get Mr. Butler out of jail," the murderer asked, if I get you de gun and den go away?" "Yes," Wade assured him. "You get the gun. Shall I go with you?" "No!" the exclamation was vehement. "I go alone!" As the man stumbled down the path, then disappeared in the darkness, Mr. Miller came out upon the veranda. In tense expectation the trio sat listening for the Pole's return. Suddenly the silence of the night was rent by a shot. Both men sprang from the porch and ran in the direction whence the sound came. Elizabeth left alone, stood as if carved out of stone. When her brother came hurrying back her lips refused to form the question she tried to utter. "What—what?" she stammered. "Dear, try to keep calm," her brother murmured. "Poor Talak will not have to suffer any more. He has paid the penalty for his deed. He kept his promise. He got the gun from his hiding place and then shot himself through the heart!" (To Be Continued)

THE BRAT WINS MUCH APPLAUSE

Myrtle-Harder Company Has Auspicious Opening at the Orpheum

Maul Fulton's sociological play, "The Brat," the same which ran all last season at the Fulton theater, New York City, served as a welcome opener last evening at the Orpheum theater for the week's engagement of that sterling stock organization, the Myrtle-Harder Co., who are with us again with the very "best sellers" of the English-speaking stage. About the particular "Brat" seen at the Orpheum last night, which was intended, should jump into the fictional pages of Macmillan Forrester's best literary coup but instead (or additionally, if you choose) jumped into the arms of his whimsomely renegade brother, Steve, we wish there were more like her to disturb the innate and complex existence of lives built on precedent and rule. It's an ill "Brat" that blows no one good and, in the case of the play last night, it blew Mac's problem book into fame wagon and into the saving arms of matrimony. As a "model" "The Brat" proved a good husband winner and teacher extraordinary in the fact or fiction.

MRS. MARY McNAMARA—Mrs. Mary McNamara, aged 79, a former resident of Harrisburg, died

Woman Runs Into Big Window in Borrowed Auto

Miss Lillian Bickle, Fourth and Walnut streets, was scheduled for a hearing in police court to-day on the charge of reckless driving. Police said this morning. Miss Bickle called at the police station last evening and told how she and a girl friend were in her room when her companion saw an automobile standing in the street in front of the building. The machine, Miss Bickle said, belonged to a friend, and she and her friend jumped in for a ride. While they were driving down Fourth to Market, it is said, Miss Bickle tried to evade running down a man and woman who were crossing the street in front of them, and ran into the plate glass window of the wholesale jewelry store of Claude R. Robins Company, 502 Market street.

SEEKS MISSING DAUGHTER—Miss Mary Carberry, aged 19, 2159 North Fourth street, who disappeared from her home last evening, is being searched for by her father in Lebanon, where it is said she was with a man last evening. It is said the pair bought a ticket at the Pennsylvania railroad station. Carberry stated to police last night that his daughter left the house, dressed as though for a short errand, before 6 o'clock last evening, and did not return. Police were asked to be on the lookout for her, and it is likely that Lebanon police will be enlisted in the search if nothing is heard from the missing girl.

ITCHING SCALP CUTICURA HEALS

So Bad Would Sit Up at Night and Scratch.

"My husband's scalp began itching. He rubbed it which irritated it until it had gotten across the front of his head. It made him lose sleep. It used to itch so that he would sit up at night and scratch. I sent for a sample of Cuticura. The itching stopped considerably, so I bought more and after he had used three cakes of Soap and four boxes of Ointment he was healed." (Signed) Mrs. H. J. Trueman, 5234 Master St., Philadelphia, Pa., March 2, 1918.

If you have a poor complexion improve it by using Cuticura Soap daily and Cuticura Ointment occasionally.

Sample Each Free by Mail. Address post-card: "Cuticura, Dept. H., Boston." Sold everywhere. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c and 50c. Talcum 25c.

At a rousing meeting of the Kiwanis Club, held at the Central Y. M. C. at noon to-day, Dr. L. S. Mudge, pastor of the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, delivered a stirring address, in which he urged the boys overseas. "Give to the boys overseas," he appealed. He gave a number of personal offices in Y. M. C. A. work, closing with a plea for the citizens of Harrisburg to get mense, everyday arguments advanced by the speaker in his advanced backing of higher church attendance. Backing him up, Dr. Harry B. Walter and William C. Alexander made brief addresses along the same lines.

For the third time, L. V. Fritz, of the Harrisburg Shoe Manufacturing Company, carried away the attendance prize, a box of "Monito" hose, contributed by William C. Alexander, sales manager of the Moorhead Knitting Company. C. K. Boas distributed silent books, fuse lighters.

At the meeting it was announced that F. B. Rice, popularly known as "Dutch," one of the most popular members of the club, has resigned from the position of associate agent to that of general agent for the Equitable Life Insurance Company of Iowa. He will be associated with General Agent Tyson and will be in charge of the Harrisburg offices.

At the request of "Bill" Brown, his favorite song, "Long, Long Trail," was sung, in a pleasing manner, Robert C. Smith, baritone soloist for Zion Lutheran Church, sang a number of selections. In addition to his church work, he holds the position of soloist for the P. R. R. Concert Company. Mr. Smith has a rich baritone voice of great volume.

Kiwanis Club Is Urged to "Get Behind the Boy Overseas" by Dr. Mudge

When attaches of the Auditor General's Department learned this morning that York county had not only given Sprout a majority but had elected Republican Congressman and Republican Senator, they kept the wires hot with congratulations to Samuel S. Lewis, of the tax bureau. Mr. Lewis said last week that he was going to show the folks in the department a thing or two and to-day they were handing him bouquets over the wire on the great result.
