"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER XLIV

"Five dollars and sixty-five cents; five sixty-five!" That went galloping through my mind like a hideous refrain.

What was I to do? The luncheon check was five sixty-five; the tip must be at least sixty cents more—and I had less than five dollars and a half.

Stealthily, under the table my hands went fumbling through every compartment of my purse—but no blessed miracle had converted the five dollar bill and three dimes and two nickels into one cent more than I had figured it in my first flush of terror.

I had no credit at Carlier's. I was unknown there. And I had nothing I could offer as security for a loan at the desk—and supposing they would contemplate advancing me any money, I wore no jewelry—nothing but the plain gold band on my marriage finger, and as I wrung my cold hands together in my lap and touched my wedding-ring, I spurned myself anew to think of some way out—some way that would not humiliate my Jim.

For his sake I couldn't ask Virginia to lend me the money—and in the midst of my desperation I felt relieved because it was clearly not my duty to shame myself before her. Most certainly I didn't want to.

But something must be done. Desperately I stared around the room, searching for some inspiration. All about me were smiling, smartly-dressed men and women. Probably all that room there was no one else to whom one dollar meant the difference between misery and happiness.

Suddenly, out of that mass of indifferent, unknown, mask-like faces, one detached itself and became real. Sheldon Blake's eyes caught mine, as he leaned forward from a distant table and tried his goblet of water in greeting.

A plan leaped into my mind. I excused myself to Virginia and Phoebe on the pretext of phoning, hurried to the lobby, gave a page ten cents and the request to call Mr. Blake from the wall table in front of the third pillar, and then recalled the little "white lie" about my not to call the gentleman after all. I had gone to the lobby fully intending to summon Sheldon Blake, and with a little more of the humor to beg for rescue and the patry missing dollar—I couldn't do it.

I must return and ask Virginia for the money. However that might be, it could be managed, and in a way that need not reflect on Jim.

And so I went back and told Virginia a little "white lie" about my chronic carelessness in money matters, and how it had sent me out with a ridiculously small amount of money that morning.

"But all do those things now and then. May I lend you five or ten dollars, Anne?" she asked in an even, untroubled voice. Ordinarily that tone of hers froze me. Now it saved me humiliation, as did the careless, matter-of-fact way she slipped a bill into my hand under cover of the damask tablecloth.

Hardly was our transaction concluded when Sheldon Blake came strolling over to the table.

"Hello, Mrs. Jimmie," said he. "Will you let a thirsty and lonely standing."

man have coffee with you? Those money-grubbing friends of mine don't understand the joys of a leisurely luncheon."

"Do stay. This is such a nice opportunity to have you meet my new sisters," I said, and presented him to Virginia and Phoebe.

Then, all in a moment, Sheldon's desire for a "leisurely cup of coffee" was explained. He wanted it—with Virginia. He didn't make the slightest effort to conceal his tremendous admiration for Mrs. Dalton—and Virginia's indifference, coupled with Phoebe's utter lack of amazement, told me something more to add to my list of "notes" about this almost undisciplined sister-in-law of mine. Virginia had a great deal of charm—of lure—for men. Could that be what had separated her from Pat Dalton?

My speculations were interrupted by the arrival of the check, which Sheldon calmly appropriated and signed. After all my agony over the inglorious, missing dollar—after the actual ordeal of asking Virginia for help—came this absurd, yet perfectly proper ending.

And when Virginia rose to leave, Sheldon insisted on putting his car at her disposal, and phoned just before 5 to explain almost apologetically that he was detained at the office, but was sending his car and chauffeur around to call for us.

And Virginia's illuminating comment when I came and told her, was: "How kind. He must really be quite devoted to you and Jim."

"I've never noticed it before," I replied dryly, remembering the time Jim had almost affiliated himself with a gang of thieves down a street—and Sheldon had made no move to stop him.

"You'll have dinner with us to-night—won't you, girls?" I asked when the car deposited me at my door an hour later.

"A nice little family party," asked Virginia in a tone that was almost friendly. "We'll be glad to come to get away from hotels and to test the housekeeping Jim boasts about."

That left me in a warm glow of delight—over which a shower of cold water was destined to be cast before I left—for I was summoned to the phone in the midst of peeling potatoes, and Phoebe's voice whispered: "See says she's so tired she just can't go out again to-night—will you please come here to dinner instead."

I knew Jim would want me to accept. But I turned from the phone, hard on my own "Yes," two doubts came to assail me.

Had Virginia seen through my flimsy little pretext about being careless with money—was she asking us to be her guests at the Rochambeau because she suspected that my proud Jim could hardly afford to entertain any "extras" at dinner?—And did her invitation include Neal?

(To Be Continued.)

CHANCELLOR MAX RESIGNS

London, Nov. 9.—Prince Maximilian of Baden, the Imperial German Chancellor, has resigned, according to a German wireless dispatch picked up here last night. The wireless said the Prince Maximilian tendered his resignation in view of the altered parliamentary situation, but that acceptance of it is still out of the question.

Lutheran Units Are to Form Great Merger; New York to Be Scene

Pittsburgh, Nov. 9.—Three great bodies of the Lutheran Church—the General Synod, the General Council and the United Synod South—will be merged into one body to be called the United Lutheran Church of America, it was announced here last night.

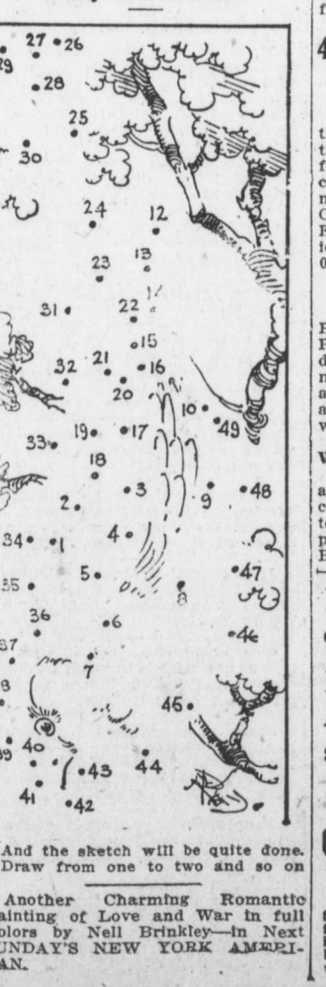

The amalgamation will take place at a convention in New York starting next Tuesday, the ratification to be held in the Hotel Astor, Friday evening, November 15. A complete constitution for the government of the new body has been adopted by all synods. The three bodies to be merged are the oldest in the Lutheran Church. The General Synod was organized in 1820, the General Council in 1867, and the United Synod South during the Civil War.

Son Gives All to His Mother in Eight Words

Norristown, Pa., Nov. 9.—In the office of Register of Wills Miller here appears an instance of paper conservation. The will of Wade H. Myerle, of Pottstown, written on the back of a No. 11 envelope, is on file for probate. It was a used envelope sent to him with a letter on September 5, 1918. He died on October 20. Here is all that is written.

"Everything I own is left to my mother."
(Signed) "Wade H. Myerle."
"Brother next heir."
It was not dated nor was his signature witnessed. As his mother renounced the right to letters testamentary, his brother, John, qualified.
