

AMERICAN ARMY DRIVES ONWARD FOR NEW GAINS

Advance Along Entire Lines Despite Bad Weather Conditions

With the American Forces on the Lorraine Front, Nov. 10, 5:40 p. m.—The second American Army this morning launched its initial attack in Lorraine. Its objectives were limited. The villages of St. Hilaire and Marcheville were captured, as also were a number of woods.

With the American Army on the Sedan Front, Nov. 10.—The American troops fought their way forward yesterday along virtually their entire line despite the fact that the weather was about as bad as could be.

The Americans started in with the knowledge that, with Germany's action, on the armistice conditions announced, an early cessation of hostilities was among the possibilities. This fact, however, only appeared to make the men more anxious to accomplish as much as possible against the enemy while he was deciding what reason to make.

The resistance encountered was split on the whole, though consisting largely of machine gun activity. The terrain crossed and captured was on par with the most difficult ground the Americans have taken thus far. It gives them the most advantageous positions possible for a further advance.

Captured by Mistake The principal obstacle in the path of the Americans on the morning northeast is a series of hills behind Chaumont-Devant-Damvillers, close to which place they already have pushed their line. The Americans have a half-circle around the heights preparatory to encircling and overtopping them as they have so frequently done in the last campaign.

The American made things interesting for the enemy by advancing pretty much everywhere along their line. The enemy artillery fire was almost exclusively from large caliber guns, indicating that he has withdrawn all his lighter pieces and is shelling from positions a great distance away.

Five American ambulances driven by mistake into the German lines northeast of Lion-Devant-Dun and were captured. This incident was witnessed by some comrades who organized a rescue party and returned with the ambulances, four prisoners and three guns.

By evening the Americans were in complete control of both sides of the Meuse, and had in addition occupied Remouville wood. They also crossed the river at Mouson, thus making their lines on both sides complete. From Villers-Devant-Mouson southward.

Not Waiting on Peace Exist of the Meuse the Americans went ahead both north and south of Damvillers.

Along the line of the Meuse, the front from Sassy to Wadellcourt last night was marked by artillery and machine gun fighting. American army trucks moved about last night in the zone just behind the front line with their headlights burning. Because of the low visibility, officers believed that the enemy hardly could see the lights and if they did see them, they would not be of any great assistance.

The fact that Germany had sent an armistice delegation to the Allies has not slowed up the American operations. From the heights east of Dun-Sur-Meuse to Sedan the same dash that has characterized the work of the captured Germans the offensive animated the American troops in their operations.

Morale is Good "What is the use of staying out to be killed on the last day?" was the comment of scores of prisoners brought in yesterday by the Americans. The captured Germans were more discouraged lot than usual.

Most of them declared that since their government is offering them the opportunity to surrender, they appear to be convinced that it is absurd for them to neglect the opportunity to surrender.

The American army is flying over Dun-Sur-Meuse. Dun is a picturesque town on the east bank of the Meuse and is situated on high hills whose steep slopes rise abruptly from the main street.

Still at Vandalism When the Americans entered the town the German butchers had hung a crown on the spire of the church which crowns a hill. For a few hours the Americans were too busy to bother with it, but then the American took its place, the German emblem becoming the trophy of the engineer corps.

The usual despoliation marked the German withdrawal from Dun. Except for the destruction of roads and bridges, little property, however, was destroyed. The Germans carried away everything of value they could get. What they could not move they destroyed. The shops of the town were looted. The shops of the long occupation by the Germans. Over a majority of the shops there are German signs.

In nearly every church the thought uppermost in the minister's prayer was the approaching end of the war and a note of gratitude that at last the rule of the arch criminal, the Kaiser, had been broken. Notwithstanding the temperature had dropped and there was a brisk wind at times hundreds of worshippers made their way to the favorite places of prayer. On the threshold of the churches they paused to speak of the abdication of the Kaiser and to discuss for a brief moment the night's dispatches from the war fronts, wondering the while whether the courier from the German war headquarters during the day with the power to the plenipotentiaries to sign the armistice and thus cause a cessation of hostilities.
