YANKEES FORCE HUNS TO KNEES; 750,000 DROVE

Pershing, Ordered to Take Argonne, Had Army Ready in Nine Days' Time

Paris, Nov. 18.—American divisions totaling more than 750,000 American combat troops participated in the action beginning September 26 known variously as the battle of the Argonne and the battle of the Meuse, but which history may call Sedan—the battle that brought Germany to her knees and as far as human foresight goes ended the world's bloodiest and costliest war.

Metz Pivot For Enemy

Metz also was the pivot on which the enemy swung through Belgium in France, and therefore obviously it was the pivot on which his retirement must hinge. The Argonne, the next step below here, threatened the great railway arteries running westward from Metz.

Yankees Go In Sept. 26

It was at daybreak of September 26 when the Americans went in. Using nine divisions for the preliminary attack and under vigorous artillery support they advanced six kilometers daily lengthening and attenuating, ### er was necessary to pursue a policy of reducing a salient or nibbling at it. The American troops had shown what they could do.

A broader policy of general attack along the entire line was then adopted and high command called upon General Pershing to take the Argonne sector, admittedly one of the most, if not entirely the most, difficult of the whole front.

The outstanding feature of the Argonne forest is a long chain of hills running north and south, covered with a dense growth of trees and underbrush making an advance difficult and offering superb defensive qualities.

The high command told Pershing to cut it. The American first army was put in motion from St. Mihiel.

In nine days it was on the Argonne line ready for an attempt the failure of which might mean disaster and the success of which would give untold results. This quick movement of an enormous body of men, the establishment of a new line of supply and all the complicated military preparations, was regarded with pride by the American commander.

They knew that on them depended the fate of the great attack on the rest of the front.

It was at daybreak of September 26 when the Americans went in. Using nine divisions for the preliminary attack and under vigorous artillery support they advanced six kilometers daily lengthening and attenuating, ### while roadmakers for the transport and other supply organizations worked day and night at their tasks.

Day by day the official communications and the telephone even to the farthest advance line told the Americans that for every mile the Germans gave way before them they were yielding another mile to the British and French on the left; that the American pressure was felt like an electric current throughout the line.

On the morning of November 2 the German official communication told the Americans they had won, because for the first time in the war the enemy officially admitted that the American attack had effected a breakthrough. The Americans knew that what finally happened on the morning of November 11, when the armistice was signed, was only a question of days.

"Going Like Hell" At 10.55

Last Monday morning the general commanding a certain division was called to the telephone in a far advanced position and asked if he had understood that hostilities were to have ceased at eleven o'clock in the morning. "Yes," replied the general. "I did. But at 10.55 we were going like hell!"

How quickly

It is a fact commented upon with pride by the American commanders and complimented by the Allies that seven of these divisions that drove their way through this hard action never before had been in an active sector, while green troops, fresh from home, were poured in as replacements.

The Associated Press dispatches from day to day told what these men did; how the enemy was slowly pushed back from his strongest and most vital positions, through one defense system after another, using his finest selected troops, which had been withdrawn in many instances from other portions of the line.

36 Divisions Fight Yanks

The attack delivered the morning of November 1, which began the second phase of the Argonne battle, was the death blow to the German army. Between September 25 and October 21 enemy divisions to the number of 36 were identified as being opposed to the Americans in this sector. Between November 1 and November 6 the enemy threw in 14 fresh divisions, but all in vain.
