CAPTAIN W. S. BARKER

Captain Wilbur S. Barker, in command of the Twenty-third Battery, anti-aircraft artillery, is at his home, 9 South Nineteenth street, on a short furlough after having seen service for more than fourteen months overseas.

The job overseas has been too big, and the responsibility too great to make a statement, and besides, "there are too many horrible things that one wants to forget."

Captain Barker has seen service from Calais to the Italian border, and from Flanders to the Verdun front. He was originally in command of Battery B, First Battalion, and later of the Twenty-third Battery, at one time being stationed at the American headquarters, with General Pershing. His battery shot down ten German planes, considered an excellent record, the best French record for one unit being thirteen planes for the period of the war.

From this place Captain Barker will leave for Fortress Monroe, where he will have charge of the anti-aircraft units. He has seen foreign service for almost fifteen months, and sailed from West, November 13.

Captain Barker served in the Spanish-American war as a member of the Porto Rico campaign.

Men and women of all ages, boys and girls, soldiers and others were counted among the prisoners herded into the central command room of the new Post office. Proprietresses of almost city-wide notoriety were among those arrested. Some of the older offenders, it is said, expressed surprise when they were disturbed, stating that they thought, "things were fixed."

In the raid were included houses in Middletown, Highspire, Steelton and Harrisburg. Army trucks from the Ordnance Depot at Middletown were used as patrols, and from 11 o'clock Saturday night until 2 o'clock in the morning they unloaded their machine guns in the Middletown Post office as a result of the dragnet operation of the raiders.

Planned Early The raid was planned at a conference of Federal officers, military authorities and State Police officials Saturday afternoon. Among those present at the conference were Charles G. Miller, representing the War Department; Captain George F. Lumb, acting superintendent of the State Police; Captain W. C. Price, of Company C, State Police, stationed at Pottsville; Lieutenant Colonel Chesterton, of the Middletown Aviators; Captain A. A. Delaphe, commanding officer at the Ordnance Depot at Middletown; Lieutenant Harold Glasgow, of the Ordnance Department, and the two secret service officials. Lieutenant Colonel Chesterton, as local ranking military officer, was asked to furnish the detachment of military police.

Began Work at 11 The cleanup began at exactly 11 o'clock, and every place under suspicion was approached at one time. The state troopers did not wear their puttees, and were otherwise informally equipped. One inside the houses, they pulled their caps from their brows and at once revealed their identity. Forty of them were brought to the city to handle the raid.

The officials and raiders at a final conference early Saturday evening closed up late in the dragnet and arranged for the complete disfigurement of the followers of the red lights.

Bewilderment, defiance, supplication, fear, anxiety—almost every conceivable emotion was expressed in the faces of the victims of the wholesale arrests, as the strangest crew ever assembled at one time in Harrisburg waited in the Federal Court room for the disposition of their cases by the Federal officers.

A "Clean" City On the street corners, and in the Mayor's office, almost the same emotions were being expressed by the city's guardians of the law. The policemen are the ones who have reported that Harrisburg is a clean city, and that their efforts to curb bootlegging were working wonders in the city. Saturday night, while scores of soldiers arrested in the raid, were drinking and violating law generally, the police had made only two arrests for bootlegging. An hour after the huge trucks with their prisoner loads tore through the streets from the Alva Hotel, the Crystal Hotel, the "Bucket of Blood," and other raided buildings, and unloaded at Third and Walnut streets, the police gradually began to realize that a higher power had stepped in, to stop down a moment the system that permitted protected vice to flourish and winked its eyes at disorder, and exposed the rank inefficiency or deliberate neglect of the Harrisburg police department.

Police Not Informed The police were in no wise notified of the raid. Tuesday the federal officials notified Mayor Keiser that they were here for an investigation. He told them he considered the city clean, but would be glad to lend his patrolmen and patrol if any disorderly places were located. It would have taken days for the patrol to transport the number of ill-famed characters it was necessary to haul about the streets of Harrisburg to the halls of justice during the three hours of the clean-up.

Police Are Informed The police department was informed of the condition of affairs here more than a week previous to the raid by Captain De Lappe, of the Ordnance Depot, came to light today.

The Captain called at the Chamber of Commerce to make complaint of soldiers returning to camp intoxicated, and that he knew this liquor was being sold in the city, and reports other than regularly licensed places. Andrew S. Patterson, president of the Chamber, took up the matter with the Mayor, and the latter down ten German planes, considered an excellent record, the best French record for one unit being thirteen planes for the period of the war.

From this place Captain Barker will leave for Fortress Monroe, where he will have charge of the anti-aircraft units. He has seen foreign service for almost fifteen months, and sailed from West, November 13.

counting of their misdeeds in the past; Robert Chenoweth, at present under bail on the charge of selling narcotics illegally, and Pearl Wilson, who, for years, in spite of numerous protests to the police, has been conducting a questionable house at 1008 North Seventh street.

The "Bucket of Blood," 1219 North Seventh street, which speared forth negroes ranging in ages from children to senility, and which has been written on police and court records as the dark scene of disorderliness, larceny, and even murder, perhaps more than any one location within a radius of many miles, was one of the places raided. Police have said for years that the house should be cleaned up, but have never made a conscientious effort to "null" the place.

"On Good Behavior" Robert W. Long, aged 65 years, admitted he was manager of the rooming house in Race street, Middletown, which was raided and that he had been in the business thirty years.
