"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

(Copyright, 1918, by Kings Features Syndicate, Inc.)

It wasn't until the day after Anthony Norreys and his "job" crossed my path that I realized how tremendously serious Jim was about his "great chance to help Terry." My boy insisted on getting up bright and early and on having Neal start him on the study of bookkeeping before that brother of mine went off to work.

"It's like this—if Terry needs me to help out his friend and release an able-bodied man for the war, he needs me instantly," mused Jim audibly. "So the thing to do is to prepare myself while I'm mending and do my mending mighty quick at that. We'll fetch in the doctor to-day and see if he can't get me ready to be on the job by the first of the week."

Jim was too generous to feel belittled at the thought of taking on a job that had been offered to Neal—that was clear. The only thing that wasn't clear was a remark I overheard Neal make to him:

"Of course, Jim, this work is far too important for me, anyway—but you understand I might try to whack

MRS. LEWIS OF BROOKLYN

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"For one year I was miserably from a displacement, general run-down condition, with headaches and pains in my side. My sister induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I found it helped me very much and such a splendid tonic that I am recommending it to any woman who has similar troubles."

MRS. ELISE G. LEWIS, 30 Vernon Ave., Brooklyn, New York.

Such conditions as Mrs. Lewis suffered from may be caused by a fall or a general weakened, run-down condition of the system, and the most successful remedy to restore strength to muscles and tissue and bring about a normal healthy condition—has proved to be this famous root and herb medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have disturbing symptoms you do not understand, write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of their forty years' experience is at your service.

THE HEART BREAKER

A REAL AMERICAN LOVE STORY

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XII
Mildred was a flirt. The consciousness of this truth impressed itself upon her sister's mind many times during the winter of 1916-17.

For it was rather gay winter in Fairlands. The war on the other side of the Atlantic furnished numerous excuses for entertainments of various sorts, the proceeds of which went to the Red Cross, Belgian Relief, etc.

The Brent girls were active in all such affairs. Although their regular work occupied most of the daylight hours, they were never too tired to take part in charades, tableaux or other entertainments from which profit was gained by means of pleasure.

At all of these functions Mildred was as happy as a child and always ready to add to the gaiety of the occasions by her merry chat and infectious laugh—but these are not essential to popularity.

Honora—much less attractive to the unthinking observer—had a charm of manner and a warm sympathy that won her the genuine liking of those who really knew her. While she was aware that Mildred watched her little sister without any sensation of jealousy—save, perhaps, where Arthur Bruce was concerned. And it was in this connection that she decided that Mildred was a flirt.

"You are sure you do not care any more for Arthur than you did, Milly?" the older sister questioned

The Great War

BEGINNING in the near future, the Harrisburg Telegraph will print from day to day a complete and accurate history of Central Pennsylvania's part in the great war. This history is being prepared with great care, as to cover all the war activities in the several counties of the central section of the state. There will also be included a complete roster of the men who served in any branch of the national forces at home or abroad.

This history will likewise contain much of interest which has not been published, including many thrilling stories and citations of this and other governments for bravery in action or for distinguished service of any sort.

The historical matter has been in course of preparation for some time and the telegraph is now able to announce that definite steps have been concluded for its publication.

Any suggestions which might be helpful in the making of an accurate Central Pennsylvania history will be appreciated, and should be addressed to: War History, Harrisburg Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa. All matter submitted for this purpose should be copied from the originals, as otherwise valuable manuscripts might be damaged or lost.

HIDDEN JUNE BOMB KILLS 10

Ghent, Dec. 9.—The western railway station here was accidentally set on fire and burned on Saturday. The fire caused the explosion of a bomb that had been secreted by the Germans, with the result that ten persons were killed and several others injured.

Advice to the Lovelorn

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX
A GIRL CYNIC'S LIFE STORY
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
A young woman, a trained nurse, whom I judged to be a cynic, told me this story:
"Four years ago I met and fell in love with a doctor. During our formal engagement I discovered that he had been also visiting a certain widow and paying surreptitious attention to her. I immediately called off our engagement and rejected him. It made me bitter against the entire world. I decided to go out with any man who had lots of money and who could give me a good time and to break every man's heart that I could. I began to frequent cabarets and drink wines and dance and crave good clothes. At present my idea is that no man is to be trusted with a woman's soul and heart."
Will you kindly express your opinion on this story, as I believe that there are many such young women.
N. C.

One must be indulgent toward a girl who has been wounded in love, but it is quite true that cynicism is a foolish attitude, and that to be proud of one's cynicism, as many people are, is more foolish still. This young woman will, of course, come to see in time that a world of men is not to be condemned because of the faithlessness of one of them, and that her notion of wholesale retaliation is most unjust. There are plenty of ways in which a loving heart may express itself, whatever its tragic experiences may have been, but there really isn't any room in the world for bitterness.

AS TO "GROWING UP"

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Please help me solve these difficult problems. How old may girls be to have boy friends? When may she go out? At what hour to be at home? What is usual for a girl to wear her hair up and have high heels? Don't you think it is the duty of every true American girl to speak to the girls of our country. Naturally, I believe we shouldn't go too far—but talk and a girl? What harm?

R. C.
The custom in conventional society is that a girl is introduced or "comes out" at 18. After this her life is much like that of her elders, except that she doesn't go about with much unchaperoned. Rules for girls outside the most conventional circles are somewhat less rigid. A girl usually wears her hair up at 16, and I suppose she wears high heels earlier than that; but I wish she wouldn't! I don't see why she can't have boy friends at any age, especially if she doesn't limit herself to one at a time. As to young men in uniform, aren't girls rather too eager to assume that soldiers are lonely? It is unwise to suspend the rule that introductions are necessary.

Some people learn of the harmful effects of coffee by reading. Others find it out through experience. In either case it is a good idea to adopt a fire that was dying down.

"Anyway," Mildred ventured when her sister did not reply, "I said just the same thing to Tom Chandler."

"Tom Chandler?" Honora exclaimed. "Oh, Milly, I would not say such things to a chap like Tom."

"Why not?" Mildred argued. "He's lots of fun."

"Yes, I know he is—and thoroughly untrustworthy. He will grab an ell if you give him an inch. And there are some rather uncomfortable stories afloat about him."

"That he drinks, you mean? Well, what if he does take an occasional glass? I like a man with enough snap to do as he pleases. Of course," she added, seeing her sister's disapproving look, "I do not mean that I could stand attention from a man who really drank hard. But I do not believe that Tom does."

"Even so, why throw the gauntlet down to him as you did when you as good as dared him to fill your dance card?"

"Because I want to have my little fun with him," the other answered. "Do you know what I did? I told Arthur that I would be at the Dentons' at 8:45. I told Tom I would be there at 8:30. So he will beat Arthur to it. Just stand by and see what happens."

He admired Honora. "Oh, Milly, dear," her sister began, but further protest was checked by the stopping of the cab, at the entrance to the Denton home.

An attendant sprang forward and opened the door of the equipage, and confidential talk was impossible.

But the conversation recurred painfully to Honora Brent's mind a few minutes later when she saw Tom Chandler step forward and claim Mildred's dance card.

A moment later Arthur Bruce approached. At sight of Mildred engaged in animated conversation with Chandler, he hesitated, then turned to Honora.

"How awfully nice you look!" he murmured. "That pink frock is mighty becoming to you. And you have your hair dressed in a new way, haven't you? I say, Honora, you're a stunner to-night, all right."

His tone of genuine admiration brought a brighter light to her eyes and a deeper flush to her cheeks.

Arthur was right, Honora Brent was unusually pretty this evening. He moved away, and, greeting Mildred, held out his hand for her card. With a mischievous smile she handed it to him.

Honora saw him glance over it, frown slightly, then write his name twice. After which he handed the card back to Mildred and returned to Honora's side.

"How many dances may I have?" he asked, taking her card from her. "As many as you like," she replied frankly.
