

BUSINESSMEN INSPECT CAMP

Commercial Chamber Pleased at Progress Made at the Aviation Depot

The invitation from Andrew S. Patterson, retiring president of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce, to the members of that body to go to Middletown and inspect the aviation depot and Y. M. C. A. there, did not mention anything about the good fellowship and sociability that would prevail during the trip, but those in charge saw that there was plenty of both of them.

The businessmen, who met in Market Square and boarded special cars at 7.24, had their eyes opened when they got to Middletown. For many of them the vast warehouses, the orderly army camp, the Y. M. C. A. and the great stores of aviation supplies and airplanes found there were a revelation. Almost unknown to them, they perceived, a great factor in the local community had sprung up in Harrisburg's very dooryard.

The first thing of interest, of course, was the men themselves. There are 960 of them, 250 quartered in tents by the roadside, the remainder in commodious barracks. Their esprit de corps is fine notwithstanding the natural anxiety of many of them to get back into civil life.

Businessmen were amazed at the splendid spirit of these men, many hundreds of miles from home, in many cases, who still are "carrying on" despite the apparent desolatory life that must lead.

Here are a few of the other things that the Chamber members saw: The depot covers 47 1/2 acres of ground, and has 700,000 square feet of warehouse floor-space.

There are six officers' quarters, four barracks and one of the United States.

There are more than 2,000 airplanes, many of which were returned from ports of embarkation when the armistice was signed.

Besides these, there are great stores of hardware and airplane repair parts needed for every branch of the service.

The depot has its own hospital, fire department and garage.

The trip was made at the invitation of Colonel D. M. Scherer, Jr. and Stanley V. Bergen, Y. M. C. A. secretary. A special program was arranged in the "Y" building, where Chamber members got acquainted with about 200 lads in khaki, who were availing themselves of the privileges of the hospitable buildings. The soldiers acted as guides through the warehouses.

In the first place, the members were tagged, and had to be identified to get into the camp at all.

They acted as sentries all day, and identified a number of prominent citizens when the sentries thought they looked suspicious. The committee in charge, however, did not act as sentries, but as friends.

The men were escorted by the Municipal Band, under the leadership of Director Blumenshine, who donated the band's services. The band furnished music for the dinner where Retiring President Andrew S. Patterson presided. Mr. Patterson made a short address in which he outlined the war work of the Chamber members and their part in the coming year. He assured the soldiers that they held the same estimable position in the regard of their fellow-countrymen as those soldiers who were in the front lines.

This same view was expressed by E. J. Stackpole, who addressed the gathering. Mr. Stackpole declared the Chamber members were the business, political and civil affairs of the nation for the next twenty-five years, and that, in the hands of such leaders, the people of the nation had nothing to fear.

He declared the Chamber members were the nation's best guarantee against disruption in the social and governmental systems.

YANKS WITHOUT FUNDS PRESENT BIG PROBLEM

Commerce and other agencies also receiving calls for help from transient lads in khaki.

The problem is declared to be reaching such serious proportions that the public and business are considering ways and means for the raising of a special fund to help them.

The Red Cross, according to its by-laws, cannot furnish money to soldiers who find themselves miles from home and with their resources depleted, if they were furnished transportation money when they left their camps. It is pointed out that many soldiers, relaxing after their army service, pay visits or have a good time with their money, then are left with no funds to take them home.

For such soldiers the only aid the Red Cross can give is to telegraph to the homes of the soldiers and learn if there is any one who will make good any advances made to them.

If a soldier leaves his camp unprovided with money to get home, the Red Cross can furnish him transportation, but under no other circumstances.

The rural school must be a clearing house, a public forum, for the community, Dr. Driver believes. To have it operate as such at its highest efficiency, he declares that rural schools should be consolidated.

Schools in the rural communities on the average are too small and community meetings held in them bring together only groups of the small community which mingle together even if there are no such meetings.

Superintendent G. A. Grim, of Northampton county, spoke on "Educational Measurements" and their use in the schools. Dr. Francis G. Blair, State Superintendent of Illinois, spoke on "Rural School Supervision." A round-table was held at the conclusion of the meeting when some of the more important questions facing county superintendents were discussed.

Preliminary plans were made at the meeting of the Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association for the holding of an annual track meet for the various secondary schools throughout the state. The first such meeting is planned for the spring of 1920 and a committee was appointed to bring the matter before the general sessions of the Pennsylvania State Educational Association.

ALIEN SECTIONS TERMED MENACE

Department of City and Borough Superintendent of the sixty-ninth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Educational Association, in his talk on "Educational Measurements."

Methods of measurements where they are used, Dr. Courtis told, were Bolshevism from beginning to end, the teachers using just whatever standards that they pleased in judging of the capacities of the students. Such judgment is very discouraging to the pupils, Dr. Courtis told, for very often the children may receive lower grades than they had previously received and thus cause the children to become discouraged when they believe they are making no progress, whereas such is not the case.

Technical details of the tests were discussed by Dr. David S. Indiana, professor of education at Columbia University, in his talk on "Problems of Determining Objective Standards in Elementary and Secondary Schools as Preliminary to Use of Measurements." LeRoy A. King, of the Department of Educational Administration of the University of Pennsylvania, spoke on "Pennsylvania Statistics of Standard Tests."

Nominating Committee At the conclusion of this meeting a nominating committee was appointed to report at to-morrow's meeting. Included on this committee are Superintendent W. G. Landis, of Northampton; Superintendent E. M. Haulshaus, of Lebanon; and Superintendent Thomas S. March, of Greensburg.

"Vitalizing the Rural School," by Dr. LeRoy A. King, superintendent of the Randolph county, Indiana, schools was one of the more interesting talks at the interesting meeting of the department of county superintendents. Dr. Driver told that much could be done by vitalizing the rural schools by making them more up-to-date school equipment which cause the children to enjoy themselves, larger and better playgrounds were urged as one of the best methods to secure this interest. Attractive and interesting production equipment would be needed for these grounds, but this would not necessarily have to be expensive for much of it could be produced by manual training classes.

The rural school must be a clearing house, a public forum, for the community, Dr. Driver believes. To have it operate as such at its highest efficiency, he declares that rural schools should be consolidated.
