According to a Russian colonel, Bolshevist forces, numbering about 1,200 were entrenched in villages to the south, being equipped with cannon and machine guns. The heavy snow prevented artillery from being brought up to support the advance. Men who arrive in Harrisburg from camp are directed to the office at Third and North streets while they still are in the railroad station, by a epresentative of the board stationed there. Many who did not live in Harrisburg before the war are getting jobs here and making this their home. At the army camps soldiers are directed where to find the nearest employment bureau when they reach home. The entire country is thus organized for the purpose of finding employment for the soldiers.

Russ Slaughter Germans Berlin, Jan. 11.—The Bolsheviki are slaughtering the Germans in the sections of the Baltic provinces which have recently come under Bolsevik control, according to Herr Winning, the former German minister to the Baltic provinces. He reports extremely bad conditions at Riga and other parts of Livonia and Courland now in Bolshevik hands, with the Baltic Germans the objects of attack recalling the historic St. Bartholomew's night, on the part of the Bolsheviki and their local Russian supporters.

assult cases, quite a number are less important charging misdemeanors.

Just néw pork is selling somewhat lower in Harrisburg markets than it is generally throughout the country because of the great influx of local grown meats into the city markets. The same condition will exist with the beef market in the spring when the fattened cattle are slaughtered and marketed throughout the territory.

These conditions are peculiar to certain communities of which Harrisburg is one. Many communities depend almost entirely for their meats on the western product and with the source of supply there seriously depleted because of shipments to feed the Allies and the soldiers overseas, no decrease can be expected for two years or until livestock can be raised to replace that which has been killed.

Prices to Continue High
Conditions are much different with other articles of food with the removal of most of the restrictions and the fast return to pre-war conditions. Unlimited prospects for profiteering exist, small grocers fear, and they say that prices of food may go skyrocketing.

It will again be comparatively easy for one man or group of men to crime.
