'When a Girl Marries'

By ANN LESLIE
A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wit

CHAPTER III

Virginia, aren't Jacquelin your favorites?" I asked, my hopes of reconciling her Pat on her reply to that question.

Her eyebrows lifted quizzically and she smiled reminiscently a second before she replied: "Yes, they are. Why do you ask with such a grave air, Anne?" "Because it wasn't just an accident that Pat remembered. Of course he wouldn't go spying and on you. Of course he didn't ask me to keep him informed of your address. But when my chance gave it to him—remembered that flowers you best—and sent them with heart roses."

I spoke each word tenderly with slow emphasis, Virginia staring at me with puzzled expression. The quizzical smile still on her lips, but it was faded with an air half terrified, half defiant, she was alternately fingering her white hands and then looking to the still in her lap. At last she turned to me with a shy smile that seemed to belong to a Virginia ever before referred to me.

"You seem very fond of Pat, Anne, seem to believe in—his sin—Have you known him long?" "I don't know how you came to meet him."

"I met him at the Blue Dragon one day when we were motor-ing with Betty and Terry," I said, "that I could tell this much of truth, and hoping that I didn't need to reveal the rest of it, the Blue Dragon? People do at all sorts of out of the way places."

out to ask to join him." I said awkwardly, little timid about too many details.

Virginia asked her fine brows in pretty piment.

"Was Pavith your brother? Where did you meet?"

"Through my," I replied, still more uneasy. The conversation was threatening to get away from me, and I'd get quite where it was going and us both.

"Through my?" Anne, you're so oddly non-committal all of a sudden. What is the mystery of how you met my hand? Was he with another woman?"

"Yes," I replied, her hands began twisting her lap again, and her nostrils silvered, a bit, like those of a stive racehorse.

"As Virginia spoke her hands began twisting her lap again, and her nostrils silvered, a bit, like those of a stive racehorse."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Resist to Marry Widow

Dear Miss Fairfax:
Three years ago a dear friend of mine, twenty-three years old, died and left a young, beautiful widow of twenty-one years and a child a year old. Immediately I was struck by a sympathetic feeling upon his death. I am now in love with her. I am twenty-one, a graduate of a recognized university and have a profession which in a few years will well fit me financially.

The young woman is cheery and companionable and genuine. Time and again I have asked myself whether my feeling was infatuation, but always came to the conclusion that it is genuine love that comes direct from the heart. I personally believe that the only test of marriage is, "Are the ideas of these two individuals the same?" But by parents and friends it would be considered terrible to contemplate matrimony with an unfortunate widow. Therefore, what shall I do, sacrifice of parents or sacrifice of genuine love? DAILY READER.

If the young widow is as charming as you believe her to be, perhaps you are wrong in assuming that your parents would disapprove of your marrying her. Try bringing them together, and they will doubtless learn to like her. If you are really in love, you will try every expedient.

THE HEART BREAKER

A REAL AMERICAN LOVE STORY

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Mildred delivered a parting shot as she left her sister at the door of Mr. Hilton's place of business.

"I have about decided not to see Arthur Bruce," she declared, "even if he comes to our house. I don't care if I did write him a letter, asking him to come—and did go to the trouble of taking it out in the pitch dark night to mail it. I probably won't see him."

"Why?" Honora questioned, although she had strong suspicion as to the reason for this threat.

"Oh," she said, "I don't want especially to see him. When I wrote to him, I did so fancying that he was my very special friend. But since he writes private letters to you, I take it he granted that he likes you better than me. Not with a short laugh, 'that I care. There are as good fish in the sea as have ever been caught. He's not too tall only man.'"

Honora's temper rose. "No," she admitted, "there are other men—but some of very different calibre from Arthur."

"You mean to taunt me about Tom Chandler?" Mildred exclaimed. "That's a nice sisterly thing to do!"

"I meant nothing of the kind!" Honora denied, thankful that she could say this truthfully. "What I meant was that, in spite of all the men you know, Arthur is the one you can always depend upon."

"I am not so sure of that!" with a shrug of the shoulders. "It is evident that he cares more for you than for me. Oh, I imagine I'm jealous, for I am not. I've never watched the point where I care to carry on a private correspondence with any man—least of all with Arthur Bruce."

"No," she said, "I am not so sure of that!" with a shrug of the shoulders. "It is evident that he cares more for you than for me. Oh, I imagine I'm jealous, for I am not. I've never watched the point where I care to carry on a private correspondence with any man—least of all with Arthur Bruce."

Ask Her the Reason

Dear Miss Fairfax:
I am twenty-one and in love with a girl of twenty. She has always reciprocated my love and things have been bright for our future until about six weeks ago, when her actions toward me changed considerably. I have done nothing to hurt her feelings and am sure she has no reason for her change of attitude. I still meet her about twice a week, but am afraid to ask her about the above subject, which has given me considerable worry. Will you kindly tell me what steps I should take? E. B., Jr.

I think you are a good deal too timid. Why should you be afraid of the girl you are in love with? Make a point of seeing her and talking the thing out. Don't let so serious a matter simply drift from bad to worse.

Be Careful in Using Soap on Your Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle. The best thing to use is just purified coconut oil, for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very soaps or anything else all to pieces cheap, and beats the most expensive you can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.
