"When a Girl Marries" Bringing Up Father

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife Brice, "you're ist what Jim called you-ghostidden. Otherwise you wouldn't be cting as if Betty weren't-wane.

She's about the most practical, sible, dependable woman offices.

"She does," I declared. But more than ever I doubted my own word as the evening wore on— punctuated, first, by a message from Carlotta, and then one from Vir-ginia. Carlotta had been utterly defeated. She couldn't trace the last phone call from Mrs. Bryce's phone, but she begged us to think up some way for her to help. "She's a brick!" declared Terry again.

haven't yet fully learned what love is. Women Without Temperament. There are plenty of women, un-troubled by what we call tempera-ment, who are content to lead a cool, formal, external sort of life. They compare their suitors from the standpoint of prudence, and they are capable of marrying a man for whom they have merely a gentel lik-ing, because they want to get settled in life. They enjoy the distinction of being married, and they delight in settling up the machinery and they expect the lover to play his part acceptably in this series of rites. But they are quite willing that he shall express all the emotion he has through flowers, candy and jewelry. They are relieved if they find that lovemaking can be reduced to a min-imum. Life isn't a drama to them, or a with. He has found a girl who is con-genial mentally and who is an enter-taining companion and who seems to him fair to look upon. He realizes that he is of marriageable age and that he has a comfortable income.

that he has a comfortable income. He suggests, politely and consider-ately, that they establish a domestic partnership. Perhaps he is just a little light and casual and incidental in making this suggestion of his, be-cause he doesn't wish to put himself in the position of being rebuffed. Why Hasn't He Won Her? But he doesn't expect the girl he has chosen to be light, also. That she should decline to discuss the matter is something he isn't prepar-ed for. He knows she likes him. He believes she has good reason to. 2683 ed for. He knows she likes him. He believes she has good reason to. What in the world can be the matter with her? He gives the matter a good deal of thought. At last a suspicion comes to him. This girl friend of his isn't like some other girls he has known. She has a heart. She has emotions. There is something very real about her. If she promised to love a man, she would mean it. Yould mean it. Can it be that before she makes his line.

stuh — weit, frankly, alt that isn't in his line. It's too much to ask of him, he thinks. Isn't it enough if you ex-press a wish to marry a girl? Ought not that to content her? Why need she hold out for something that he hasn't got to offer? Counterfeiting Love. Shall he confers that he hasn't it? Or shall he pretend that he hasn't it? Or shall he pretend that he hasn't it? Or shall he "fake" his love-making. Or shall he withdraw from the situation altogether, and when the time comes round console him-self with a different type of girl? Frankly, it is a problem. One can't soberly counsel a young man of the easy-going, unemoutional
