"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CXVIII.
Copyright, 1918, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Terry stood watching Jim, as he ripped open his letter, scanned it with eager eyes, reread it slowly and then looked up—his face ruddy with delight. I found myself burning with shame and disappointment. Why couldn't Jim live up his best moments? He had declared only a moment before that he'd stand by Terry. Now why didn't he do it?

As if in answer to my thoughts, Terry picked up his cap and overcoat and made ready to depart. "Night folks," he said quietly. "I'll call the department in the morning, Anna (and let you know Betty's address.)"

Jim went over and slapped him on the shoulder. "That's the stuff, Terence, my boy," said he. "No more mooning—Betty's all right—never a doubt of it. My advice is when you get her where she has to listen, give her your idea of how you feel. Tell her how you got up in the air when she vanishes without leaving an address."

Terry's set face went a shade whiter. "Thanks for—the advice," he said coldly, and held his hand out to me.

"Wait a minute—wait a minute. Don't go off with a grudge," Jim said. "Say, Terry, if I thought there was anything wrong with Betty B., don't you think I'd be on the job—or if you needed me, either, for the matter of that?"

Jim smiled his winning smile, and I could see that his very indifferent matter-of-factness—"selfishness," I called it to myself—actually was doing a lot to comfort Terry.

Now Jim encircled me with his left arm and laid his right hand on Terry's shoulder, and, standing in that warm intimacy, he spoke in his most magnetic tones:
"Lad, I've a big deal on. But don't you know I'd drop it like a flash if Betty was in any trouble. Why, I'm as fond of her—as you are."
At that Terry's face went a fine revealing crimson—which Jim appeared not to notice—even when Terry said a hasty good night and dashed away. At once Jim began capering about in the greatest delight—like a happy boy.
"I've a big deal on, girlie, and I think it's going right. We'll be rich if it does, and my lilac princess shall have strawberries, sugar and cream—and pearls and rubies and fine cushions to sit on, too.
I took fire from his spirits and laughed out my reply:
"But don't condemn me to sit on one of those cushions and sew; a fine seam all day long, will you Jimmie boy? I'd like to keep moving, even if I find myself married to a captain of industry."
"You cut a little thing. Always ready with an answer. You'll always keep moving—and keep me chasing after you."
Jim seized me in his arms and kissed me over and over again—quick, darting kisses that began by expressing his own exuberance of mood and ended by flinging to the consciousness that it was his wife he held in his arms. Closer and closer he drew me. "I wasn't the 'pal' he had suggested, but his wife now, his sweetheart, even as he was, no matter how he grieved or failed me, my man—for all time my man."
"Do you love me?" whispered Jim. "Are you my girl—my little sweetheart?"
"Yes," I whispered. "I love you, Jim. I was afraid you had—had gotten tired of me."
"Tired of you?"
Jim drew me closer.
"Tired of you?" he laughed, and added with sudden seriousness: "But you won't ever hurt me again by trailing around with Norroys, will you?"
At that I struggled to be free. An ugly tide of memory swept over me. There was something Jim and I must settle now—once and for all time.
"Jim, now you see that Betty was really with me last night, don't you?" I asked. "So aren't you going to say you're sorry for thinking I—didn't tell the truth?"
"Bless your heart, little sweetheart, I'm sorry for every minute I've ever wasted quarreling with you—or doing anything but make love to you, wonder girl—sweetheart."
He drew me back toward him again, but I had to ask a question

MAKING THE MOST OF OUR CHILDREN

A Series of Plain Talks to Parents

By Ray C. Beery, A.B., M.A. President of the Parents Association.

DOES YOUR BOY HAVE DIRTY HANDS?
One mother on being asked if her boy had yet passed through the "dirty hands and face stage," replied that Jim had been in that stage for the past ten years and, at the present age of twelve, wasn't showing any signs of stepping out of it.
And that isn't far from the usual situation, despite the fact that many parents consider ten or twelve to be the worst age. The fact is that boys of almost any age let loose, without parental insistence upon cleanliness, will invariably become more and more careless about their personal appearance.
Of course, at the beginning of adolescence, when boys begin to undergo marked physical changes, and naturally began to want to make themselves attractive to those of the opposite sex, we find they paying more attention to the personal appearance.
But it is important that parents should teach their children when young to wash their face and hands at least before every meal.
One mother writes to me: "How can boys be kept from getting into the stage where they enjoy dirty face and hands?"
Boys do not really enjoy wearing a dirty face better than a clean one, unless perchance they have taken harm to give a reason, that is based upon the health consideration. The principle thing, however, is simply to make this one of the practices that you expect of the children as a matter of course. Do not let any child out before he has both hands and faces absolutely clean. If you rigidly carry out this policy, the habit of cleanliness will be quickly performed.

In summer time, when the children go barefooted, the face, hands and feet should be washed clean just before going to bed. Do not allow any child to go to sleep before he has washed thoroughly. Adopt the same plan in regard to meals.
Before a boy is old enough to cleanse himself, the washing operations should be conducted in a most cheerful manner. Take time. A little cosmetic of the right kind, perhaps a dash of good talcum powder, such as father uses when he shaves, will make things easier. Particularly avoid hurting the child's ears; make the whole process delightful and interesting.
Tell a boy that you notice he washes just like some very much-admired friend of his and somehow the whole process will at once become more decidedly enjoyable to him.
It is not absolutely necessary to give any reasons why they should do this, although it would do no

Returning Soldiers in France to Build Cottages in War Zone

Munich, Feb. 11.—To give employment to returning soldiers the ministry for social affairs and the ministry of finance have decided to build cottages in districts where there is, or may be with the resumption of industry a need.
The ministries have announced that building bonuses will be allowed by the state, the state itself bearing two-sixths of the costs, the empire three sixths, and the towns or communities one-sixth. The houses to be constructed will be workmen's cottages, and the rent for them will be settled by the state.

To Work Broken Time in Shamokin Coal Region

Shamokin, Pa., Feb. 10.—Further indications that the anthracite mines of the Shamokin will likely work broken time for the next month or two were shown to-day when all of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal & Iron Company's Reading collieries suspended until Wednesday of this week. At the offices of the corporation it was stated that the mines would "likely" work the rest of the week. This is the biggest operation in the Shamokin regions.
The Susquehanna Collieries Company resumed to-day after a three days' lay-off, but no definite statement was made as to how many days its collieries will work.
Suspension of the Greenough colliery, independent, at Marion Heights, which went into effect a week ago, is now said to be for an indefinite period. The other independent producers in this section are working three days a week.

Mrs. Lizzie Loughney, 2950 Reed street, Philadelphia, is certain she has cause for many thanksgivings. "After baby was born," she says, "I developed a rather severe attack of acute indigestion. It seemed just like a lump formed inside my stomach. My appetite became poor and my sleep was broken with bad dreams. I became nervous and badly run down. My aunt, Mary Kelly, told me about Tanlac. The first bottle gave me relief. This is my sixth bottle and I've grown steadily better ever since. Tanlac's a real tonic."
The genuine J. I. Gore Co. Tanlac is now sold here at the Gorgas Drug Store.
