National War Aid Hears Returned Captain Tell of Bombs and Barrages

Fahnestock Hall held a capacity audience last evening for a social meeting of the National War Aid Society. Ray Bowman arranged the beautiful decorations of flags and the program announced by Mrs. William Jennings, the president, opened with two numbers sung by the Wednesday Club chorists directed by Mrs. W. F. Harris. Both "Peggy" and the "Lullaby" received much applause.

Captain Edward J. Stackpole, Jr., told in a most interesting way, just the things the mothers of the boys wanted to know at first hands. He started with the trip overseas after life at Camp Hancock, and the ship's convoy to England, the landing at Liverpool and going from Dover to a rest camp. Captain Stackpole spoke of the first time his men were in an engagement, close to the Germans—of their experience with bomb droppers from aeroplanes and explained the barrages and the effect of shell shock which prostrates even the bravest of men.

At the close of the talk Captain Stackpole was given an informal reception in the lobby and many were the intimate questions asked him by relatives of men in his own company. Mrs. Stackpole, wife of Captain Stackpole, was presented with a basket of beautiful scarlet carnations by the War Aid.

Our New Home In The Penn-Harris Hotel Building Will Be Open Tomorrow, Thursday THIS is a step forward in our career of which we are justly proud. This is the result of our efforts, since we came to Harrisburg, of giving an optical service to the people of this community high in ideals. HAVING had years of experience in the profession and being thoroughly familiar with the various methods of conducting the optical business and having seen the results of various kinds of business—many kinds of which can be seen today—we decided when we launched in the optical business in this city to render a service which we could always look upon as being high class. THAT our policy has been appreciated by the public is most emphatically attested by the success we have attained. WE do not point to our success boastfully, but we do point to it because our success means as much to you as it does to us—it means that your confidence in us is merited. Tomorrow We Open Our New Home in the Penn-Harris Hotel Building, With Quarters Modernized in Every Respect WE especially invite you to consult us about your eyes. If they are defective we will tell you so; if you do not need glasses we will be very frank to admit it; if you do need glasses we will give you the very highest type of optical service, determining the condition of your eyes, with our delicate, modern optical instruments. WHILE our service is on the highest plane, our prices are always reasonable. You will know that the best is the most economical in the long run. Our optical service is unquestionably the best. J. S.
