Names Secured by Lodge Sufficient to Block Treaty Ratification

Washington, March 4.—Names of thirty-seven Republican members of the new Senate, a number sufficient to block ratification of a treaty, were read in the Senate last night by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, who said they had approved a resolution setting forth that "the constitution of the League of Nations in the form now proposed to the Peace Conference should not be accepted by the United States."

The list was inserted in the record by the Republican leader after Democratic Leader Martin and Senator Swanson, of Virginia, had raised simultaneous objection to consideration of the resolution, which he had introduced after long conferences with minority members and communication by telegraph and telephone with Republican senators and senators-elect who were not in Washington.

Three Sessions
There were three sessions of the Congress. The first, extra session met April 2, 1917, following shortly after the turbulent and successful Senate filibuster on the administration armed ship bill which marked the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress. The dramatic night address of President Wilson to wrge war with Germanw which was promptly declared, marked the opening of the extra session, called but a few weeks after the President's inauguration for a second term. In this emergency we have tried to do our part. We scoured the country for raw materials — our Traffic Manager spent his days riding freight cars in — we shipped raw materials in carload lots by express and pleaded with manufacturers to increase their deliveries to us.

It is with pride that we announce to the drug trade that the shortage of Vick's VapoRub, which has lasted since last October, is now overcome. More than once have I seen His Majesty abruptly start away from a person with whom he happened to be conversing at a reception or ball, leaving the unhappy lady or gentleman speechless and crushed, because of an innocent admission that a son or a daughter, or perhaps an uncle, had the measles or a cold. Once I found Madame von Kotze in tears behind some shrub in the White Hall, while all around her dancing was going on. "What is the matter with Your Ladyship?" I inquired; "can I be of service to you?"

"No, thank you," she sobbed: but to think that he said that to

"but to think that he said that to me!"

"Who is he, and what did he say?"

"The Kaiser, of course. When he heard that my boy was ill, he remarked, turning on his heel: 'How dare you come to my house under such circumstances?"

That happened at a time when Madame von Kotze prided herself upon her particularly friendly relations with His Majesty.

But the most absurd instances of the Kaiser's manla for precaution is afforded by the case of little Henry of Reuss, already mentioned. As soon as his death became known, william requested Her Majesty to have disinfected all the dresses that she had taken to Gera when attending the baptism of the prince, several months before, although he knew at the time that His little Highness did not die of an infectious disease, as at first thought, but of a sort of scurvy.

"Platten, however, is every inch a Prussian. The 'will to power' is in his blood. It is his creed. Only in his case this will is directed not toward the attainment of militarism, but toward proletarian power. He seemed to me to be a Hindenburg of labor, cold, calculating, ruthless. He knows what he wants and goes the shortest way to get it.

"I don't thing Platten would have the slightest hesitation in ordering the execution of a hundred or a thousand men if in his judgment the cause of working class revolution demanded it.

"I hesitate to reach alarmist conclusions, but all the time I gazed on Platten' I had the feeling that the world is not yet done with ruthlessness. The ruthlessness nurtured by militarism for generations has not ended with the end of the war. It has had changed habitations.

"I don't give interviews,' Platten told me. 'I write articles from time to time myself, and in these articles I say what I have to say. The movement which is called Bolshevism is coming, because it must come. There is no other way out for the prole-tariat. If the world were really
