

Senator Frank A. Smith Takes the Oath Today

Senator Frank A. Smith, who succeeds to the seat long occupied by Lieutenant-Governor E. E. Beidleman, was sworn in late this afternoon. The ceremony was postponed from last evening because of the absence of Lieutenant-Governor Beidleman, who delivered an address at the annual dinner of the St. David Society in Scranton last night. Mr. Beidleman desired the pleasure of presiding over the Senate when

Mr. Smith took his seat, the two being close personal friends. Senator Smith and Senator Robert D. Heaton, of Schuylkill, who took his seat at the same time, were in the Senate chamber this morning during the sessions, and Senator Smith's desk, which is located very near to that formerly occupied by Senator Beidleman, was heaped high with flowers, the gifts of friends in many parts of the State. He was the recipient of many congratulations.

The new Dauphin county senator has spent considerable time since election going over the legislative situation and is preparing a number of bills for early submission. He is very interested in the development of the Capitol Park extension area and very desirous of doing anything that will further that project.

Vigilance Committee May Be Organized by Ad Club

Businessmen who are members of the Advertising Club of Harrisburg still are incensed over the methods employed by the proprietors of a local moving picture show to advertise a movie film which is to be shown here. They declare that inasmuch as the perpetrators of the action were not fined, the publicity they secured was cheap, and would be with a fine of $25.

NAVIGABLE RIVER WOULD OPEN GREAT INDUSTRIAL FIELD

Millions Could Be Saved Annually by Cheaper Water Freights, Engineers Explain After Study of Statistics

The canalization of the Susquehanna river looks so good from an economical standpoint that private capital in New York has had a survey of the river with the thought of asking the Pennsylvania Legislature for permission to deepen the river for navigation purposes, Major William B. Gray, of the United States Army, told a representative delegation of Susquehanna Valley citizens meeting at the Penn-Harris yesterday.

Major Gray made the statement in reply to a question as to whether or not he thought the idea practical. But the Major said he doubted if the Legislature would give such a charter and that it would be much better to do the work through the Legislature or Congress, or both.

100,000,000 Tons of Coal. It was brought out at the meeting that with the Susquehanna river made navigable it would be possible to transport by boat from the Pennsylvania mines, 100,000,000 tons of coal a year at a saving of about $1 a ton on transportation charges. About 70,000,000 tons could be delivered from the mines directly into boats and the remaining 30,000,000 tons by short hauls to the streams.

The meeting was addressed by Major Gray, R. A. Zentmyer, chairman of the State Water Supply Commission; Lyman H. Howe, of Wilkes-Barre; Edwin Charles, of Milton; W. C. Forney, of Milton, and many others. Mr. Zentmyer proved by carefully worked-out tables that there is ample water in the river even at the lowest stages to meet transportation needs.

"We should also impress upon the War Department that the federal government, itself, has more than a passing interest in this survey and project. Inasmuch as we were successful in having the government erect the warehouse of the aviation section of the signal corps, and the depots for the ordnance and quartermaster departments on the banks of the Susquehanna river and should we be so unfortunate as to become involved in another war the navigability of the Susquehanna river would become a matter of vital and strategic importance to the government of the United States. For it must be remembered, that not only are there immense warehouses located on its banks, but some of our largest establishments manufacturing munitions of war are also located here and, just north of Harrisburg, we strike the tremendous and inexhaustible coal fields of Pennsylvania, all of which are matters in which the government, itself, must of necessity, be concerned."

The room was at a low temperature, 5 below zero. It felt like the Arctic region. It was a large room, capable of storing big quantities of product.

Mr. Hershey amazed the Ad man by his next remark. Said he, "A few days ago we had in this room 40,000 pounds of butter. Now there are about 12,000 pounds left. We ship a great deal of butter."

The Ad man surely was amazed. It seemed to him almost incredible that so much butter was made in the Hershey Creamery Company's plant. Here was a new phase of the business. Not exactly new, but a phase that now stood out in a new light.

Not able to contain himself, the Ad man asked, in a very surprised manner, "How in the world do you happen to make so much butter? I thought you were in the ice cream business."

"We certainly are in the ice cream business, and in it right," replied Mr. Hershey, "or we wouldn't have this big plant; but I'll tell you something that the public doesn't know and probably would never give a thought."

"Let's have it," persisted the Ad man.

"Our milk collecting points, where we receive all the milk and cream from the farms, are maintained all the year round. We take all the milk and cream our farms produce.

"Some seasons are not as big as others and we get an over-supply of milk and cream. You see, we have to take it all whether we need it for ice cream or not. The supply is often very much larger than is required for ice cream.

"Naturally this extra supply must be used in some way or there would be a great loss. So we use it for making that rich golden butter that you saw in that churn upstairs."

"Yes, I understand," replied the Ad man, "but you make so much HERSHEY'S SUPERIOR ICE CREAM it would seem to me that you wouldn't get enough cream for that, let alone have any left to make butter."

"That brings in still another part of our business," explained Mr. Hershey, "and I will tell you about that, too, for it really is the side of the ice cream business upon which we mainly depend."

"Let's hear that story" begged the Ad man.

"We get our milk and cream from—" Here the general manager of the big creamery stopped short, saying, "Let's get out of this cold room. It's warmer up in the office. Come up there and I'll tell you about our dairies."
