

AMENDMENTS TO GET A HEARING

Compensation Law Changes Will Be Taken Up at Capitol Tuesday

Following a conference yesterday in Philadelphia between Attorney General Schaffer and Harry B. Mackey, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Bureau, it was announced that a public hearing on the proposed amendments to the compensation act would be held next Tuesday afternoon in the Supreme Courtroom in the Capitol.

Chairman Mackey and Francis H. Bohlen, counsel for the board, have prepared a tentative bill which includes a new schedule of rates to be paid persons injured during the course of their employment. One of the most important amendments provides that compensation shall begin seven days after the injury. In this connection the act reads: "No compensation allowed for first seven days, but employer must furnish reasonable medical service from the time of the accident until the thirty-first day after disability begins, at cost not to exceed $150, and the Board has the power to order further medical services at a cost not to exceed an additional $250."
