"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

As we taxied to the matinee Virginia returned to the matter of Jim, but now she spoke in terms of what I knew was much nearer her heart than clothes and allowances. Another woman would probably have launched this discussion as soon as I came into her house. But Virginia as I was now coming to understand would never easily break down the barriers of her own reserve and pride. She had always to work herself up gradually, to a point of complete frankness.

"Anne, did Jim say anything more about the way we schemed to get him into Tony's office?" she asked abruptly after two or three efforts to introduce the subject easily and naturally.

"Not about your part in it," I returned truthfully, if evasively.

"Jim was very angry at me. I don't know whether or not we're on speaking terms," said Virginia, trying to act as if it were all a joke.

"He was angry with Anthony Norreys," I said, hoping that I wouldn't have to reveal how far this anger with Tony had swept us both.

"No one could positively stay angry at Tony long. He's the salt of the earth. Jim just doesn't know him, and it hurts his pride to think he had to accept help from Tony. You wait till Jim's riding around in his own car."

"What difference will that make?" I demanded eagerly.

"All the difference in the world! Tony's new to Jim, and that proud brother of mine hates him. So can you imagine how this Tony situation galls him?" replied Virginia with assurance.

"It didn't fully reassure me, however, because I feared that Jim's attitude toward Tony was one of those instinctive dislikes that go deeper than reason and so can't be dealt with by reason. Half smilingly I thought of the old rule:

"I do not like you, Doctor Fell. The reason why I cannot tell. But this is what I know full well—I do not like you, Doctor Fell."

"Yes, I can see how the situation galls Jim," I replied, and I think the memory of it will always keep Jim from liking Tony."

"Nonsense," said Virginia allisively, "this would have closed the discussion even if we hadn't arrived at the theatre at just that minute."

All through the play, which the applause marked as sufficiently interesting to command and hold every one else's attention, my mind kept wandering back to Virginia's suggestion. I dreaded the thought of pinning Jim down to a discussion of more matters, but it seemed to me that if I smilingly and like a real pal insisted on a proper adjustment of our everyday affairs, things might go more smoothly between us. By the end of the third act I was fully resolved to try the thing out on a business basis.

At the mere idea my heart thumped madly, but I thought I'd probably get used to our new code of conduct in a day or two and be ready to introduce the financial element into it before long.

"Shall we go for tea?" asked Virginia as we crowded our way up the aisle.

"I'd love to—only this is my cast-iron evening and I'll be late as it is," I replied, rather thankful that I didn't have to sit at a table and reveal my sketchy knowledge of the

THE HEART BREAKER

A REAL AMERICAN LOVE STORY

By VIRGINIA TERRHUSE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER LIX.

(Copyright, 1919, Star Company).

Honora did not hasten to return to Mildred. Instead she made Mrs. Higgins comfortable for the night, assisting her into bed and giving her such medicine as her physician had prescribed.

"I am sure my scoliosis is getting better," the invalid remarked after she was comfortably settled for the night. The rest and treatment have helped me very much."

"I hope you will sleep well," Honora stooped to drop a kiss on her companion's forehead. If you want anything, ring your bell."

"I will," the other promised.

Honora had reached the door when a sudden thought made her pause.

"If you hear any movements about the house in the night do not be disturbed. I told Arthur that if his mother needed any one to stay with her, or to look after her, he must send or come over here. So if you hear an arrival do not be startled."

"No, I won't," Mrs. Higgins assured her. "But if Mildred goes to sleep, I'll wrap up warmly. It is a cool night."

"I doubt if Mildred goes," Honora considered it wiser to make this statement now so as to avoid embarrassing questions later. "She is tired. I will go in her place."

"Well, I suppose as you are older, you are the one—only as Arthur's been in trouble, yet you asked a man to come here—even pretended to Mrs. Higgins that a girl friend was coming, too—and when Arthur in his great trouble, and longing for your sympathy, arrived, he found Tom Chandler kissing you. I think, my dear, if there are any explanations to be made, it is you who must make them, not Arthur Bruce nor myself."

As long as the girl has made this marriage, there is nothing to do but to give her all the help and encouragement in one's power to make it a success. And this cannot be accomplished by criticism. Perhaps the experience of marrying a widower with six children may have a setting effect. Very often this is the case.

A Smooth, Hairless Skin For Every Woman

(The Modern Beauty)

With the aid of a plain delatone paste it is an easy matter to rid the skin of unsightly hairy growths. The paste is made by mixing some water with powdered delatone. This is applied to the hairs not washed and after 2 or 3 minutes rubbed off and the skin washed, when every trace of hair will have vanished. When you go to your druggist for delatone, be sure you get the genuine article.

A PRIZE CONTEST for Writing Advertisements to be used by this Shop

Competition Open Only to Amateurs

8 Prizes offered—4 First—4 Second.

No Strings attached to this Event.

Anyone can compete whether or not a customer.

4 First Prizes of $25 Each.

4 Second Prizes of $15 Each.

Payable in Merchandise to be selected from any portion of my stock.

HAVEN'T you sometimes thought that you could write better advertisements than those you read in the newspapers? Very probably you could. For the professional ad writer is likely to lose his originality—his enthusiasm and to become stale. Also he is prone to become imitative. Very often an advertisement written by an amateur has real selling force.

I am offering 8 prizes to the women of Harrisburg and vicinity for the best ads devoted to various phases of my business, as follows:

- Millinery: First Prize—$25, Second Prize—$15
- Dresses: First Prize—$25, Second Prize—$15
- Suits: First Prize—$25, Second Prize—$15
- Store Service: First Prize—$25, Second Prize—$15

Mail not more than four ads: one on each subject. And limit them to 175 words in length. Supply your own headline.

Just sit down at your desk—think of what you'd say about your Millinery, Dresses, Suits and Store Service if you were running my store. Scratch off some ads and pop them in the letter box. Write each ad on a separate sheet of paper—sign name and address to each one. The contest will close April 22nd. The advertisements will be judged by a jury of New York City advertising authorities. So there is no danger of partiality. Professional advertising or newspaper writers are not eligible to compete. We intend to publish the prize-winning ads with the name of the winners during May. Other ads received may also be published but in each instance we shall first secure the permission of the writer.

Don't be afraid to try your hand. Don't say, "Oh, there'll be so many attempt it that I'll stand no chance." The New York Globe recently offered $1,000 in a similar contest. Only 48 entered. The man who won the $1,000 had to defeat only 47 competitors!

Scratch off your ads this evening. Mail them tomorrow.
