

The Private Life of the Kaiser

FROM THE PAPERS AND DIARIES OF THE BARONESS VON LARISCH-REDDERN
The Kaiser and Kaiserin's Late Major Domo, Chief of the Royal Household at Berlin and Potsdam.

Baroness von Larisch-Reddern is the TRUE name of the Berlin Court Lady who gave the story of the Kaiser to Henry William Fisher, Ursula, Countess von Eppinghoven being a nom de guerre, heretofore used to shield her.

After the bustle occasioned by Wilhelm's preparations for travel, life in the Neues Palais, which was never brilliant, but often spectacular, became duller and more insipid than ever. Entertainments were completely abandoned and economy was the word heard on every side. The Court and House marshals gave strict orders that expenses be cut all round; a number of the servants were shipped to Berlin, so that their board wages, to which they were entitled while in Potsdam, might be saved; only flowers from the royal gardens dared be used for decoration, while great loads were bought from different purveyors during the

The World's KILLS PAIN

Kaiser's residence at home, and finally the expense of the kitchen were reduced two-thirds, because the Empress took meals privately with the children.

"William the Sudden." But the Kaiser, sometimes all of a sudden, burst anew into the midst of our humdrum existence, having left his friends abruptly, or his business unfinished; occasionally, it was said, press criticism brought him back earlier than anticipated. Hence he employed a day or so despatching the most urgent affairs of state, and immediately set the ball of courtly entertainments rolling. He would order a dinner of a hundred covers or more for next day, and again, while that was in progress, invite his guests or part of them to accompany him on a yachting expedition on the Havel lakes.

Gun-charger Riger, who, in his gold-embroidered dress, stood behind the Kaiser's chair on festive occasions, often conveyed a brief command of that kind to the House marshal on duty in this fashion: "His Majesty's yacht Alexandra, and so and so many auxiliary yachts must be ready at such and such an hour,"—usually at four or five, if the meal began between one and two.

Regal Extravagance. To execute this imperial wish, telegraph, telephone, and mounted messengers were plentifully employed in an effort to drum together officers and crew, hire vessels, and secure a band. Furthermore the personnel of the "coffee and tea kitchen and confectionery had to be sent to the steamer with their outfit, for each of the five meals to their Majesties were accustomed must be served punctually.

Promptly at the hour named, the marshal on duty submitted that "carriages were waiting to bring their Majesties and the company to the embarking-place, and, before the vessel left, the official took heart to ask his master where he commanded that supper shall be served.

Maybe His Majesty answered, carelessly: "Pfaun Insel," or, "Park of the Marble Palace," "at eight." The first is a small wooded island in the Havel, containing a semi-furnished royal villa that affords a certain amount of space, but little else, for the accommodation of guests. The castellan of the place selected for the invasion was now hurriedly informed, and the stable-master set about getting ready ten or more so-called kitchen vans to transport all that was necessary; refrigerators and hot-cosets, table-linen, basketfuls of silver and plate, china and crystal, wines, meats, vegetables and delicacies, lamps and candelabra, and a thousand and one accessories.

All these things were under the care of certain officials and servants, and the staff being thoroughly organized, the whole train was equipped in an incredibly short while and started for its destination, the Court-marshal following in his carriage to superintend the arrangements noted here if the Kaiser had not meanwhile made up his mind to go elsewhere.

Servants Driven Like Cattle. For the places of rendezvous were changed with alarming frequency, and before a cavalcade started for a certain castle or park, the men usually offered to lay wages that upon their arrival they would find a telegram ordering supper in some other lodge or villa, or on the borders of some lake five or ten miles to the south, or east, or west, as the case might be.

Once they were chased in this manner from Charlotten Hof to Wildpark, and from the Entententank, far out in the royal hunting grounds. The Entententank is a romantic spot, such as young lovers might seek for a picnic; but imagine the tumult and work which the innumerable establishment of a royal table of from twenty to one hundred covers must occasion, when the nearest castle or royal villa is ten miles off.

The vans had to be sent back to the Neues Palais for tables, chairs, carpets, and a little tent for the toilet, while the nearest military post furnished field cooking-apparatus, and a dozen or more horses were driven lame travelling to and fro with heavy loads. The damage caused on occasions like this by broken crockery, crystal, and ruined furniture also reached a high figure.

A Wild Whim Uncontrolled. Foreign visitors at our Court frequently wondered how it was possible for one man to give employment to three hundred and fifty horses in driving and riding, as the Emperor did. The story of these whimsical excursions explains that point, for, aside from the horses needed for the service, carriages (or motor cars), must be sent to fetch their Majesties and suite to some distant place, perhaps, while others were collecting the ladies and gentlemen in Potsdam and neighborhood, or from incoming trains, who had been "coming to the present at supper at some place where at the time stipulated no sign of life existed.

At twelve or one o'clock in the morning, when the imperial master in his titted suite and his friends, had forgotten, in several hours' sleep, all about the forty-five minutes of entertainment that kept a small army of men, women, and horses on the run since lunch, the vans and carry-alls returned to the palace, often awakening many a noble lord and lady who wondered that any living creature dared disturb their august slumber.

When the Kaiser was at home, his conversation perpetually turned on the subject of furniture, and his secretaries and adjutants were kept busy scouring the papers for items that promised excuses for a visit to one place or another.

As soon as an opening was discovered, the Court-marshal must find ways and means to secure an invitation for the Kaiser, and to that end either the military authorities, the Chief of Counts or some Prince or aristocrat living in the neighborhood received instructions, which in many cases were most eagerly followed, for William's presence in any place, not his capital, was a guarantee for no end of advertisement. Sometimes, thought, it was quite difficult to persuade the municipal authorities, the clergy, or regiments being provided with flags. His Majesty felt "graciously pleased" to bestow on one or another "ensign ribbons," an act yielding, as he considered in the way of spectacular splendor in the other hand.

He observed, for instance, that it was so and so many years since the Regiment received an honored flag. "Let's grant it a new set of colors," said William, and presently parades, religious ceremonies, speechifying, dinners, and tattoos were in the air. Or, a regiment being provided with flags, His Majesty felt "graciously pleased" to bestow on one or another "ensign ribbons," an act yielding, as he considered in the way of spectacular splendor in the other hand.

When we went to Rome the King of Italy said the Kaiser's train of eighty people reminded him of the deluge; but our three days' stay at Hanover cost nearly half as much as the tour in the Peninsula, one-third of that again in the case of carpets and rugs. The royal castles, you must know, are empty barns for the most part, and whenever either of the Majesties visited the residences in Breslau, Konigsberg, Cassel, Wiesbaden, Homburg, and Stuttgart, or when William went to his various hunting-boxes, whole loads of furniture, pictures, decorative material, and all the necessary silver, linen, and kitchen utensils must be sent ahead, together with a full force of servants, horses and carriages, food and forage.

Burlesque of Royal Pretense. Fancy, then, the tumult occasioned by the meeting between the Romanoffs and Hohenzollerns in the capital of Silesia, when two palaces had to be furnished from top to bottom! The robbing of Peter to pay Paul was almost pitiful to behold; my mistress actually had to give up her favorite damask curtains, which she bought out of her own money for Wilhelmshohe, to garnish the consular couch of Nicholas and Alix, while she herself had to sleep in a bed once occupied by the plebeian King Jerome, brought on from Cassel.

The pieces de resistance in the home improvised for their Russian Majesties in Breslau were taken from the consignment of Empire furniture, which one of the electors of Hesse bought in Paris some fifty years ago and for which payment was refused. His Royal Highness's Diet had to liquidate the bill in the end, and the Prussians annexed the country, they promptly seized the furniture as the country's own. Which is a little matter the Peace Conference should not neglect to take into consideration, for much of the Kaiser's supposed private property is really state-owned—hence should be seized and sold for the benefit of the countries bled white and devastated by Prussian bulgies at the Kaiser's behest.

Dandruff Soon Ruins the Hair
Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't. It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips. By Saturday morning not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.
