CHARLES R. BECKLEY Beckley's Business College 121 Market St.

Among the highly successful enterprises that were fostered and now exist in Harrisburg, there is one that stands out preninent and one which exempli es success in its highest degree Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Beck ey, who, after years of highly pecialized training, devote the: entire time as the heads of the departments in this beautifully equipped school, which occupies ore than half of the large third floor of the new Kaufman stor

When one walks into this in stitution and advances down the halls covered with expensive vel and to the left students of sonnel that are not su right and to the left students of a personnel that are not surpassed by any other school in this land, you cannot help but share the pride that Mr. and Mrs. Beckley feel in their beautiful and well-attended school, which specializes in the training of high-grade secretaries.

The day and night schools receive instruction from eight well-trained teachers that are experts in their given lines. A spirit of happiness and industry prevails in this school that immediately captivates the visitor's attention and compels him to voluntarily exclaim, "I never knew before that a business school could be conducted on such a high plane."

Mr. Beckley says that the calls which he receives for his stenographers and bookkeepers are far ahead of the number that he can furnish. This is only but a natural sequence of what could be expected when once the city and surrounding community have learned that it must go to BECKLEY'S if it wants the best.

The Fourth ward was shown to have the greatest number of rooms, 291 having been reported available. The Second ward was next, with 186 rooms, and the Fourteenth ward reported the lowest number of rooms, only eight being available there.

Another result of the homes registration was to show the number of houses which are reported to be unsanitary and unit for occupancy. The Department of Health of Pennsylvania, through John Molitor, chief of the Bureau of Housing, and the City Health Bureau, are cooperating in the work to improve the local housing situation. Mr. Molitor stated to-day that special agents will be instructed by him to inspect and enforce a cleanup of unsanitary conditions as reported by the Homes Registration Bureau after an examination of the cards. The women of the Civic Club committee noted where conditions were so unsanitary that investigations should be made, and both the city and State Health Departments have reported their intention of enforcing a cleanup.
