A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CLXXXI.

Once I had determined that this was the evening to discuss the question of allowance with Jim, I decided also that I'd see that my little drama had the proper setting. I must not get out at home, not dine out with the probable interruptions of meeting people we knew or drifting to a movie. So I stopped at a luxurious market and bought a fine rack of steak, two artichokes, strawberries, rich cream and a salad of French endive. Needless to say that about emptied my pocketbook. Jim couldn't call my dinner "miserable."

I got everything in readiness and popped the steak onto the grill the moment I heard his key in the door. Then I hurried on to the living-room.

"Hello, Anne," said Jim in his usual off-hand manner. "Where do we go from here?"

"I'd love to go to stay home and dine off steak and artichokes," I asked.

"Dream on," murmured Jim at the mention of his favorite food. "No—wake up and wash up." The steak's on the fire already."

"Good girl!" cried Jim in high good nature. "I'm sick of running around after extra things. I'll get the former and could do a great deal about the latter. I hurried out to the kitchenette."

It had come and I wasn't ready either spiritually or as regards my accommodations. I had a little idea that my accommodator might be efficient and my steak tender. Then, realizing that I couldn't do much about the former and could do a great deal about the latter, I hurried out to the kitchenette.

Ten minutes later we sat down to a delightful repast, as the hundreds of journals put it. Instead of two. And when the last strawberry had been blanketed in sugar and drowned in cream and lusciously delectable, I drank our amber coffee and stretched luxuriously for all the world like purring cats.

"And now to enter the bones and do the dishes for the last time," smiled Jim contentedly. "I want to talk to you first," I replied.

"You look darn serious. Fight with Jeanie again?" asked Jim, remaining good-natured even at that time.

"No, but I am darn serious. It's money I want to talk about Jim," I said, feeling all the other adventures toward accenting my financial dependence upon him.

"Money? What as much as fifty this time?"

"Jim's tone was so lazily comfortable and tolerant that I hated more than ever to banish his air of pleasure and well-being.

"It isn't what I want this time that counts, Jim. It's what I can count on all the time."

"What you can count on? What do you mean, Anne?"

"I mean—I suppose we're part-

THE HEART BREAKER

A REAL AMERICAN LOVE STORY
By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER LXXI.

It was nearly midnight when Arthur Bruce's car stopped again at the Brents' house and he and Honora alighted.

The girl laid a trembling hand on his arm.

"What shall we tell Mrs. Higgins?" she quavered.

Arthur spoke firmly. "Dear, you have been so brave and fine, do not weaken now. We will know what to say when the time comes. There is nothing to tell, for we know nothing of Mildred whereabouts."

His practical manner steadied his weary companion's nerves. "I am all right now," she said. "I am sorry I was so weak for a moment."

"You were not weak, and if you had been it would have been no wonder. You have had nothing to eat for hours," he reminded her. "I'll get you something to eat."

As Honora's key turned in the lock of the front door a figure came swiftly out of the library. It was Mrs. Higgins.

"Oh, my dear," she said in a low, agitated voice. "I am glad you have come. I did not like to disturb you. But Mildred has seemed so upset that I was worried about her."

"Mildred?" Arthur echoed the name.

"Yes—she never got home until ten o'clock, and she looked like a ghost. She asked where you were, and I told her you were at the Bents' house. When she said, 'Much she cares?' or something like that, I assured her that you did care and that we were both sorry she had to work so late. At that she looked at me so strangely and laughed out loud. So I just left her alone until you should get back."

"I will go right up to her," Honora said.

"But Arthur detained her as she started towards the stairs.

"You shall not go up until you have had something to eat," he declared. "You see, to Mrs. Higgins, she has had nothing since luncheon."

"But she was at your house to dinner, the astonished woman said. 'Why didn't she eat?'"

Honora Non-Committal

"I cannot explain. I did not feel like it," Honora interrupted before Arthur could reply.

"I will get you something right away," the elderly woman said, hurrying into the kitchen.

Honora tried to draw away from Arthur, but he would not have led her into the dining room.

"I must see about Milly," she faltered. "I must know what has happened to her."

"I can tell you now what has happened to her," he said gravely. "You may as well be prepared for it. That scoundrel, Chandler, made a fool of her when he was half drunk and suggested that they go off together. Then he met this other woman and went off with her. I suppose he got scared at his wife's threat of divorce proceedings and decided to leave Fairlands in short order."

"But he was to return to camp before this."

"So he told Mildred. That was a lie. He probably will return to camp to-morrow—unless he is arrested. For my part, I think the woman he is married to is well rid of him."

"Come in, dear, I'm just making a cup of tea for you and Arthur," Mrs. Higgins called from the dining room.

"I had some sandwiches that I fixed up for Mildred in case she'd take them when she came back from the office, but she didn't. So here they are."

Honora forced herself to eat one sandwich and gulp down a cup of tea. Then she rose.

"I am tired, Mrs. Higgins," she said. "I am going up to my room. If you do not mind, I'll be glad if you wish you would find out what ails Mildred," the housekeeper ventured. "I was wondering if"

She paused, glancing at Arthur, and then she turned to Mrs. Higgins.

"What were you wondering, Mrs. Higgins?" he asked. "Do not be afraid to say it where I am."

"Well," the widow confessed, "I was just wondering if Mildred was a little hurt at your suggesting that Honora go to your mother instead of taking her."

A Secret Out

"Mildred could not have gone," Honora began. But Arthur checked her by a gesture.

"My dear Mrs. Higgins," he said, "you have a right to know the truth, and I am sure you will not discuss the matter with anyone. Mildred and I are no longer engaged. She broke the engagement."

"Oh, no!" Mrs. Higgins protested,

20,000 28TH DIVISION VETERANS TO MARCH

city, who arrived here several days ago. The delegation will pay its respects to Governor Sprout, but will be unable to discuss the subject of the parade at any length with him.

It is now virtually assured that at least 20,000 men will be in line, since the last unit of the Keystone Division took passage from France for home yesterday. This gives practical assurance that every one of the units will reach by May 10 and on this assumption the Philadelphia Council of National Defense and the returned officers are pushing arrangements for the big event.

The estimate that 20,000 men will be in line makes liberal allowance for discharge of casual companies and other units which may arrive after their arrival. Officials claim that even the slowest of the returning vessels should reach Philadelphia by May 10, and that the city men will be ready to parade within forty-eight hours after their arrival. It is not expected, however, that the event will be arranged to take place before May 15.

The Harrisburg men with the Supply Train of the division are aboard the Liberator, which is expected to arrive at Philadelphia on May 10. The 507 members of the division, members of the Headquarters and Supply Detachment, Companies A, B and C, 103d Field Battalion, Headquarters, Medical Detachment and Companies A to F, inclusive, 103d Supply Train; Sanitary Detachment and Company F, 103d Engineers; Headquarters Sanitary Detachment, Companies A to G, inclusive, 103d Ammunition Train and the Twenty-eighth Division Theatrical unit.

While it is known that the city men with the Governor's Troop of the old Pennsylvania National Guard have already embarked for the War Department, the list of sailings have not yet told on which vessel they are coming home. It is expected that on whatever vessel they will be landed in Philadelphia.

Company I, of the old Eighth, will be the first of the local units to reach home port. It is expected to land at Philadelphia on the Pocahontas on Thursday. Company D will arrive on Sunday at Philadelphia aboard the Clarendon.

The Freedom, which is due to dock either at Brooklyn or Hoboken to-morrow, is bringing Base Hospital No. 20, 20th Engineers, Headquarters Hospital No. 38, of Jefferson Hospital, with practically the entire enlisted personnel and the nurses. Lieutenant Colonel Caplin, head of the unit, has been here a week.

It is believed that the two hospital units may go to Camp Upton but that has not been definitely learned.

Colonel Pusey has announced that he expects to devote most of the next few days to making certain that the Twenty-eighth division as an entire division and not piecemeal.

"It is the wish of the people of Philadelphia and of the State that these men participate in a divisional turnout, and we expect to have it that way," he said. His estimate that at least 20,000 men would be in line with Mr. Guenther.

Colonel Pusey sent another radio to Major General Muir on board the Mercury, which is returning with the men. He said the men would be concentrated at Camp Dix, that he was arranging a parade in Philadelphia and that a great welcome was expected.

Under army regulations, plans for the parade must be approved by Ma-

Sufferers Should Realize That It Is a Blood Infection and Can Be Permanently Relieved.

Rheumatism means that the blood has become saturated with uric acid poison.

It does not require medical advice to know that good health is absolutely dependent upon pure blood. When the muscles and joints become sore and drawn with rheumatism, it is not a wise thing to take a little salve and by rubbing it on the sore spot, except to get rid of your rheumatism. Capital Going Strong Reports from "the hill" to-day were that the Capitol departments are still going strong. Purchases to date total over $50,000 and will be larger. Attaches of the Highway department are going around with a mysterious look on their faces, but they refuse to tell why. Other department heads are considerably worried over what the Highway department has done, but inquiries as to the distance by air-ways, have met with merely the sphinx-like "Wait and see."

Henderson Gilbert, who is in charge of the arrangements for the coming of six government planes, said that the pilots will leave the ground at York about 10 or 10:15 Tuesday morning, and immediately begin the trip to Harrisburg is 28 miles or less; the machines will arrive here 20 or 30 minutes later. The winner of the race will be made of the hierarchy of two. After their arrival at the capitol six machines will fly back to Middletown field. In all likelihood they will be joined in the afternoon by one or more Middletown machines.
