They Are Not Dead

sleep over yonder, we must see to it that our American citizenship is kept true and pure and real.

These flowers in the name of our boys, like them nourished on American soil, call us to guard our oath of naturalization, and to see to it that no one is admitted to citizenship who does not absolutely renounce, without reservation, all allegiance whatsoever to every human government.

These flowers call us also to co-operate with the Americanization program which is being advanced here and elsewhere. We must stop applying epithets to foreigners which humiliate them and belittle them and depreciate them. We must become sympathetic with them and co-operate with them in their home life, their social life, their civic life, and their religious life. We must say to all who come to us: "If you intend to live here you must be Americans, heart and soul and mind!" There is an England for the incorrigibly English; an Ireland for the incorrigibly Irish; a Scotland for the incorrigibly Scotch; a France for the incorrigibly French; a Russia for the incorrigibly Russian; a Germany for the incorrigibly German. But all who dwell here, from the Plymouth Rock on the East to the Golden Gate on the West, from the snows of Alaska on the North to the torrid waters of the Gulf on the South, must be Americans. For all who dwell within our borders there is one Constitution, one Declaration of Independence, one language, one public school system, one national government—the cartilage of the people expressed according to our Nation's legal forms. And over all and typical of all there is one flag, "Old Glory," the flag under which our boys served, and for the glory of which they died.

There is a second message which these living flowers bring to us in the name of our boys who lie at rest over there. It is the summons to be world citizens as well as American citizens.

These flowers not only grow in American soil; their life is due also to the fact that they breathe God's free air, the atmosphere which is the portion of all nations and tribes and peoples. If there were time we could prove here to you out of our history that we are under bond to God to serve all nations. When our boys set sail to save civilization and humanity in Europe, the ships in which our forefathers came to these shores—the Half Moon, the Goodspeed, the Swallow, the Mayflower, the Welcome—began at their anchors and sought to go back to the Old World. And when over yonder, our boys went over the top, our ancestors, the Pilgrims, the Puritans, the Huguenots, the Covenanters, went with them, charged with them, and won the victory with them. Our history is the history of our boys, let us make here for the sake of civilization and Christianity returned in the persons of their descendants that we were needed in the Old World.

So, must it always be. Wherever on the face of the globe there is a people in need of American money, American energy, American might, American manhood, we must respond as our boys responded who have made the supreme sacrifice, for one is our king, even Christ; one is our constitution, God's most Holy Word; one is our great American product, men and women who know the right, and who dare to do it. One is our National Hymn—"From all tyranny of heart and conscience, Good Lord deliver us!" One is our sweetest national music—the falling of severed chains from the persons of enslaved men, and one is our Gloria—"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea. With a glory in His bosom that transfigures us and frees us. As He died to make men free, For God is marching on."

Let us march on with Him, in company with the spirits of the boys who are now spirits in His presence, for they are not dead, they are alive. They are the power in the earthquake that shakes the thrones of iniquity; they are the energy in God's on-marching Righteousness. Let us catch their spirit; let us emulate their example, that our flag, Old Glory, may ever float unsullied and unconquered, and that God's glory, the glory of justice and righteousness and purity, may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

While a mere slip of a lad, he has in an active mind, and can keep pace in his studies with the best of them. Among his favorite studies is mathematics, in which he has been an "A" student throughout the year.

Plans to Fly Over City

Harrisburg was promised an airplane flight exhibition to-day. William Diehl, Jr., of West New York, N. J., is the aviator who is expected to visit Harrisburg on a patriotic trip. He was formerly an instructor in the Aviation Corps, United States Army. The airplane to be used was formerly owned by the Canadian government and was used in the war. It will also give exhibitions over the city. The program calls for a start from New York at 10 o'clock. He was scheduled to arrive in Philadelphia at 11.30 and reach Harrisburg at 3.30 this afternoon. A large field near the Plymouth Rock on the west side of the city was selected for the landing, and this was Aviator Diehl, who hoped to make the trip to Harrisburg with a number of friends here. He planned to make the trip in honor of his fellow soldiers who were killed in the war and to drop flowers in his flight over the city in honor of the dead.
