

FORD MOVES INDUSTRIAL HEADQUARTERS TO TOWN WHERE LIBEL SUIT IS ON

In Less Than a Day, Mt. Clemens Becomes the Hub of a Great $300,000,000 Concern, With All Its Subsidiaries

Mt. Clemens, Mich., May 30.—The first day Henry Ford came to town to see his million dollar suit against the Chicago Tribune brought to trial, he had a headache.

He had been "russing" as he expressed it, around a motor that morning and the night before, and had inhaled some of the gasoline fumes. He stated the fact as simply as if it were common for millions of motorists to put on overalls and work around greasy machinery.

But it was that headache which made Mt. Clemens early aware of Mr. Ford's pedestrian accomplishments. His headache powder is a brisk walk in the open air, but what he knows as "walk" most men would call a hike.

He made a bee-line to the town limits and struck out cross-country. Being a lithe man with no apparent superfluous flesh and very agile in his movements, little impediments like farm fences did not impede him at all. He scaled them easily, even the barbedwire ones, one hand on top of the fence post, and then a flying leap which allowed even the tails of his spring overcoat to clear.

He saw everything as he went along, noted the character of the soil, discussed the advantages of the machine he used on his farm at home. He went aside to look at a small patch of mandrake growing in the fence corner. He had an apple of ordinary fame. He followed with his eye a bird that passed with a piece of string in her mouth, noting which tree she had selected as the site of her nest.

Walks Off Headache

There was no letup in his speed. Flowed land and sandy soil retarded him not at all. He seemed to neutralize the difficulties of the ground by putting more strength into his stride. He spoke freely of his ideas of life, of the happiness of making things "go," of the satisfaction of giving people a "good chance in life."

It may have been on that walk that his plan was born, but he that it may, it was not long after that Henry Ford had decided to make his headquarters of all the Ford world-wide interests for the duration of the libel suit.

He had struck into a road and was nearing the town when he saw an elderly man hoeing in a little garden, and the two held converse over the fence. The gardener was wholly unaware of the identity of this friendly visitor. But very soon after that chat, Henry Ford dropped a remark.

It was a remark which carried little meaning to the person unaccustomed to the Ford method of doing things.

"This is as good a place to work as any; what is the matter with us staying right here?" That was the remark.

Presently it began to appear what an apparently casual remark by Henry Ford meant.

Down in the hotels they began to move furniture out of whole suites of rooms.

Over in a business block they began to clean out a whole floor.

Trucks and vans of office furniture began to appear as if by magic, all coming overland from Detroit.

Decks, typewriters, chairs, dictographs, filing cabinets, heaps of stationery, large council tables, various cases of all sizes and shapes bulging with papers came under the guard of a small army of men.

Linemen were soon busy putting in special telephone and telegraph wires. The vast volume of Ford business began to roll back and forth across them. Swift motor cars kept the road between Detroit and Mt. Clemens busy with their traffic.

Then a corps of personal representatives, secretaries and clerks arrived.

Moves Offices in a Day

In less than a day's time the central office of a great $300,000,000 industrial concern had been transported bodily from Detroit to another city, and was running as smoothly as if it were in its specially arranged offices at home.

The Michigan Canal was for its mineral baths; but in its wildest dreams of greatness it never hoped to be the headquarters of the Ford industries.

The Ford business has outposts in every country in the world. Just now new motor factories are being planned here and there in Europe to help give employment and encouragement to that distracted continent. But the decisions made, say, about a new factory at Cadillac, or about the factory at Copenhagen, are made in hotel rooms at Mt. Clemens, Mich.

The Motor Canals for its Fordson Tractor Plant, the Eagle Shipbuilding Plant, the various banks which exist principally to handle the Ford finances, the Dearborn Realty and Construction Co., through which homes are being constructed for Fordson employees, the Dearborn Independent which is Mr. Ford's weekly magazine of opinion—all these were surprised to find their headquarters moved within one day to a comparatively small city in Michigan.

This was Henry Ford's way of saying, concerning his libel suit, "We'll fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

It had been said in irresponsible quarters that "Ford doesn't care whether he wins or loses; we'll hardly see anything of him at all here;" and while they were yet talking the head management of all the Ford industries moved in and settled down.

In order that the whole truth about the trial shall go to the whole country, another decision was made which illustrates the Ford habit of doing things with dispatch. The city swarms with newspapermen, who were sent here to report the trial. But Mr. Ford remembered that there were thousands of smaller cities in which could not afford to send representatives here and maintain them for a lengthy period and which would otherwise be compelled to take their reports second-hand.

News Service Established

So it was decided to give a news service to every newspaper in the country. In one day a whole floor in a business block was occupied. Special wires and other equipment were installed. Within a matter of days the trial was ordered. Lists of thousands of newspapers, city dailies and country weeklies, were prepared and presently the news of the trial was finding its way by wire and mail to every corner of the United States.

Thus it happens that Mt. Clemens, known for many years as a place for rest and recuperation, is now the office of the greatest industrial organization in the world as well as the scene of what promises to be the most important libel suit in legal history. And it was all done with such smooth dispatch that few of the residents have yet awakened to the fact.

Allies Jointly to Operate the Siberian R. R., Says Jap Diplomat

Tokio, May 30.—T. Matsudaira, chief of the Japanese diplomatic department at Vladivostok, who has returned to consult with his home government, is quoted by the Asahi as asserting that the cost of operation of the Siberian railway is to be borne equally by the Allies, not by the United States alone.

The railway, he said, forms the backbone of Siberia and its destruction would mean the starvation of the troops stationed at Omsk, Irkutsk and other places and also of the Russian population throughout Siberia. British troops, about a battalion strong, and the French troops, are stationed at Omsk to guard the Omsk government, he said, and they will not withdraw from that place for some time.

"Various reports are in circulation regarding the alleged activities or ambition of American capitalists in Siberia, but nothing exists that should give concern to the Japanese," declared Mr. Matsudaira.

Disabled Soldiers Training For Printers

Washington, May 30.—There is a demand for printers and machine operators in many publishing houses and newspaper offices. Fifty-two disabled soldiers are at present taking these courses under the direction of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, six of them are studying printing, eleven are taking typesetting, fifteen are preparing for linotype operators and eighteen for monotype operators, and two are studying lithography. The board trains men for linotype operators who have previously been in the printing trade. A few are taking this course who have had no previous experience, but they are required to take thoroughgoing preliminary training in the printing trade.

A former plumber received a gunshot wound in the right arm, and also lost his left eye in the Argonne Forest. His former trade was too hard for him, so he is preparing to be a linotype operator.

A typesetter, from a gunshot wound, lost a piece of his skull about the size of a dollar. Wearing a plate over the hole, his boy is learning to operate the linotype machine.

A Scotchman, living in America, who was a ranchman before he entered the service, has a stiff neck the result of a gunshot wound. During his convalescence at Lakewood, N. J., he took a six week's course in linotype operating and is now continuing the course under the direction of the board.
