President Declares the Standards of Old Order Cannot Return

Washington, May 31.—President Wilson, in an address yesterday at the graves of the American dead in the League of Nations was the covenant of governments that the millions who fell in the war shall not have died in vain and added that he looked for the time when every man who now opposes the League would be just as ashamed of it as he now regretted the union of the states after the Civil War.

Declaring that the standards of an older order are trying to assert themselves again, the President said those who sought to accomplish the return to "an order of which we are ashamed" must realize that they cannot succeed because "the peoples of the world are in the saddle" and "private counsels of statesmen cannot now and cannot hereafter determine the destinies of nations."

After paying tribute to the American dead, the President declared it would be no profit to enlarge the brave men who fell in the war unless the lessons they taught were taken to heart. The American soldiers, he said, did not cross the seas merely to defeat Germany; they came to defeat forever the things for which the Central powers stood and to see to it that there should never be a war like this again.

"It is for us, particularly for us who are civilized," said Mr. Wilson, "to use our proper weapons of counsel and agreement to see to it that there never is such a war again. The nation that would now fling out this common concord of counsel would betray the human race. So it is our duty to take and maintain the safeguards which will see to it that the mothers of America and the mothers of France and England and Italy and Belgium and all other suffering nations shall never be called upon for this sacrifice again."

"This can be done. It must be done. And it will be done."

World War Soldiers March With Civil War Veterans in Parade at Gettysburg

Gettysburg, Pa., May 31.—Returned soldiers from the great war in Europe, with the thought of those who went out to serve their country and who will never return, gave a new meaning to Memorial Day, and as the flowers were strewn over the graves in the National Cemetery many were the thoughts of the brave boys who lie beneath the blood-stained soil of France. But the ranks of the old veterans of the Civil War, growing thinner each year, makes the day a solemn one.

The usual parade preceded the exercises in the cemetery, but this was more imposing than for several years past. Instead of the pupils of the schools and the handful of veterans marching behind the band, yesterday's procession was participated in by veterans of three wars, and along with the old soldiers marched their sons and neighbors who fought in the Spanish-American War and those who have returned from the great war just closed.

Travelers Show Courtesy to Women in Smoking Car

Under the caption, "Courtesy Not Gone; Men on Railroad Train Show Old Time Deference to Women," the Altoona Tribune prints the following:

"Travel was heavy yesterday and the noon local from Harrisburg, train No. 41, was crowded to its capacity. As the train neared Altoona, there wasn't even standing room, except in the smoker, which wasn't half filled. The conductor, Albert H. Gregory, of Harrisburg, with a good natured, put on a few extra smiles and laughingly told the ladies they could find seats in the smoker. Some of them went in the train at Bellwood and East Altoona went into that car.

"The men had a fair right to snore to make the air blue if they chose. Not one of the ladies would have had a right to criticize the insufficient accommodations. Some of them didn't smoke. Of course, windows were open, but had you boarded that train at Bellwood and gone into that particular coach, you would have noticed that it was the front coach on the train, you couldn't have told that it ever had been a smoker. The ladies were heard to pass complimentary remarks about it. Small wonder! Some people say men are lacking in courtesy the e days. These men prove the opposite."
