Show Em How to Drive Mules

"Borax Bill" and his 20-Mule Team crossed the long trail from the sunny slopes of California to the Atlantic States in 33 months, reaching Harrisburg Saturday. "Bill," whose name is Ira Moon, left California with his wagons, crammed with samples of borax powder, drawn by 20 mules, and an army of nine assistants, reaching New York City last June. The cavalcade, as it tours the streets, seems like a living chapter from the pages of Breat Harte. It recalls to mind the Western methods of doing business in the days when the gold rush sent men scurrying to the unknown and untraveled West to woo fortune.

Every man with "Borax Bill's" outfit has a specialty all his own. There are singers, barkers, speakers and lassos. There is "Toothpeg Bill" of Skullville Valley, Ariz., who fears nothing from a broncho to a steer. Bill's name is William Blair. He is not yet 18 years of age. "Salvation Army" Charley (C. H. Ewell), who works the brake on the second wagon, is a star spellbinder, and has thrilled thousands with his liquid eloquence, descending on the magic powder of borax. Don't miss seeing this famous team.
