"West wasn't in the office to-day. He's out of town investigating a new proposition. So I couldn't speak to him about that stock transaction you accuse him of," said Jim, crumpling the paper he had been reading and flinging it down beside the couch where he was stretched out. "I think I'll telephone Phoebe and see if she'll jump in a taxi and spin over here to give me the straight of that story."

"Wait, Jim," I said, rising and stooping automatically to pick up the paper. "Why do you want to ask Phoebe about it?" I continued, straightening up, well pleased that I had an excuse for my crimson face.

"Why do I want to ask Phoebe?" repeated Jim, starting up impatiently. "To get the straight of it, of course."

"Don't you think I've given you the straight of it?" I asked breathlessly.

"Land—no!" chuckled Jim. "I don't think you've got West's number at all. And I want this story from a witness who isn't so blooming prejudiced."

"Jim! I cried. "You doubt my word! You doubt my word! Now listen. I gave you that story just as Phoebe told it to me. But I had to plead for permission to tell. She doesn't want to go over it and agonize about it again with you. But that isn't the point. If you want to hear—ask her if I told you the truth. I'll never forgive you as long as we both live. I couldn't bear that. Oh! The humiliation of having you think I could lie!"

"Anne, don't make a scene, for mercy's sake," began Jim impatiently. "Then he looked across the room to where I stood with back turned, and caught me by my trembling shoulders and turned me to face him. He put one strong hand under my chin, and raised it so that my burning eyes looked straight into his. I felt the tears start, but I forced them back while I waited a breathless moment for him to take me in his arms and soothe away all the doubts and differences there. He didn't, though. Instead he used words, and they pushed us apart again."

"Don't whimper," he said. "I won't call Phoebe. But you've got to let me get West's side of it when he comes back right."

"That's exactly what I think you ought to do," I said looking up at Jim with great satisfaction. "I don't think he'll lie to you—at least not very successfully when you look at him so keenly."

"No, I guess he won't," said Jim, dropping his hands from my shoulders and dawdling back to his place on the couch with an air of indifference that was like a dash of icewater in my face.

The days of our romance seemed dead. I hadn't it in my power any longer to kindle Jim's spirit nor yet to stimulate his mind. As he settled himself among the pillows I rose and went over to his side, running my fingers through his hair. "That's comfy. Good old Anne—stroke the animal and he'll get in a nice temper," said Jim contentedly. "I wasn't content, and I longed to tell him so, to ask him what magic

PRESIDENT FINDS BELGIUM LIKE A DEAD COUNTRY

Is Taken Through Devastated Sections, Where Germans Did Most Damage in Their Advance

By Associated Press.

Brussels, June 20.—Belgium is like a dead country. At least it seemed so to President Wilson and his party as they were taken through the ruins on their way to the city.

Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, accompanied the King and Queen and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson throughout the trip and explained conditions along the way.

From time to time the cavalcade halted to permit the visitors to study at close range some piece of destruction that was unusually thorough. Nieuport was the first halt. President Wilson, who was riding with King Albert, followed Queen Gertrude and Mrs. Wilson, who descended from the next car, and walked through what had been the city of Nieuport to the ruins of the canal. The only houses that were intact or even habitable were one or two frame shacks which were recently erected for the entertainment of tourists.

Lunch in Forest
The party lunched in picnic style in the Houthout forest. This piece of woods, like all others in that zone, is but the skeleton of a forest. It was well back of the old German lines. In Menin, where the work of destruction was less marked, the people gave the party the first real greeting of the day. The town was dotted and apparently all the inhabitants were in the streets. The word had gone out that the King's guests were President Wilson and his wife and after this time whenever the party passed through

Visited Old Trenches
From Nieuport eastward along the old line of trenches to Dixmude, where the lines at one time almost touched each other, the party alighted at one or two places to examine the nature of the trenches. It then went on toward Ypres. All that part of the ride was in an almost deserted country. There were very few refugees and there could be seen little attempt toward reclaiming the soil.

Here and there a civilian was encountered, but always his face expressed seeming hopelessness. Ypres, however, showed a somewhat greater display of animation. Notwithstanding the terrible destruction wrought there, a few former residents have found their way back and a dozen or more frame buildings have been erected to serve as hotels, restaurants, drinking places and small shops. They reflect the only industry in the place, catering to tourists, both official and unofficial.

LIFT OFF CORNS!

Doesn't hurt a bit! Sore corns lift right off with fingers. Magic!

Costs few... Drop a little Frezzone on that touchy corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right off with the fingers. Why wait? Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of Frezzone for a few cents, sufficient to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and callous without soreness or irritation. Frezzone is the much talked of discovery of the Cincinnati genius.

Adams Commissioners Ask Correct List of Candidates

Gettysburg, Pa., June 20.—In order that there may be no errors in the ballots for the primary election in September when a full ticket, including almost all of the borough, ward and township offices, is to be nominated, G. Allen Yohe, clerk to the County Commissioners, is sending out blanks to the secretaries of all school boards, town councils, boards of auditors and the like, instructing them to be returned to the commissioners' office with a complete list of the offices to be filled in each district, the number of men to be nominated for each office and for how many years they will serve.

DEATHS EXCEED BIRTHS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

London—For the first time in the history of England and Wales since records have been kept deaths exceeded births in the quarter just ended. While the total number of births was 161,775 the deaths numbered 241,218, making a decrease in the population of 79,443.

Forty-one per cent of the deaths were due to influenza. During the whole year of 1918, the birth rate also was the lowest on record, the average increase for each year during the five preceding years was 287,664, but in 1918 the natural increase by excess of births was only 50,782.
