Racial Enmity and Hatred Have Not Been Eliminated, He Says

Philadelphia, June 26.—Brigadier General W. W. Atterbury, vice-president of the Pennsylvania railroad, who recently returned from France, in an address before the Union League here last night, urged the businessmen of the country to devote some of their energy and genius of organization toward "the development of an efficient method of national defense." National preparedness, he said, necessitated the coordination of army, navy and industry, and to bring this about he suggested the organization of a national defense board and a complete national policy which would permit each to proceed along its own lines.
