Bamford Stars in Thursday's Game; Mower Makes a Hit First Time in the Box

With Tim Euker in the box for mauled the life out of Jess Willard, the Motive Power won over its morning rival by 5 to 0, Mower, a Mechanicsburg pitcher, holding the league leaders runless through nine innings. The earlier contest was anybody's until the last man was out. In the evening, however, the West End batters were unable successfully to connect with Mower's slow delivery. Opposing him in the box was "Snowball" Winters. Shooting the Canvasback MOUNT GRETNA AT WEST END Was Pie For Tom Marshall

When canvasback duck owned the club. While every shot did not Chesapeake Bay! Their title was acquired through the squatters right route, continuous meandering of the shores in quest of food perfected the title. The names Chesapeake and Canvasback are to ye old-time wonderful, overhead, pass shooting kills. The major portion of our work was at fairly close range, when canvasback,—which we specialized upon—made their swing over our decount by a "try," shooting at canvas-back en route, from a coffin shaped boat or sink box on the Chesapeake Bay. The last work in difficult and result disappointing duck shooting. A canvasback coming down wind, has, for speed, the proverbial "bat out of perdition" backed off the boards. I was shooting on the Susquehanna Flats, at a point where enters the chesapeake Bay. There was a vast spread of shallow water, where wild celery could be found in quantity, making this the greatest duck feeding ground in America. We were domiciled at the Flicker Club on the bay shore, about two miles tabooed. The club membership was a requisite, with all "crab" proclivities tabooed. The club prospered under the supervision of an ebony hued gentleman, answering the sobriquet of "Coalie." A man of many functions. Captain, engineer, purser and cook on the motor boat. Chamber maid, second girl and nurse at the clubhouse. Decoy distributor, guard, human water spaniel and retriever of dead and crippled ducks on the shooting grounds. human water spaniel and retriever of dead and crippled ducks on the

of dead and crippled ducks on the shooting grounds.

Members of the Flicker Club had arrived in advance, a canvasback dinner was awaiting us the first evening, followed by the hunters "pink tea" with personal experience recounting, while seated around the open fire place. "Coalie" was the welcome little human alarm clock that paged us at 4 A. M. the following morning, summoning all members to mess. Sink boxes, floating batteries, decoys and accessories had been stored aboard the motor boat the previous evening. The engine was chugging and propellor purring, a sour boat slipped out from shore, headed for Susquehanna Flats, greeted by the squawk of many ducks we disturbed from their rest. was chugging and propellor purring, as our boat slipped out from shore, headed for Susquehanna Flats, greeted by the squawk of many ducks we disturbed from their rest while passing up the bay. Two double sink boxes were anchored about one half mile off shore, safety staked down to insure stability. about one half mile off shore, safely staked down to insure stability. Eugene Du Pont, of Wilmington, Del, a man of vast shooting experience, was my box companion. When we were comfortably ensconced, the colored artist "Coalie," scattered decoys in a most artistic manner, where they would attract the attention of the traveling birds, finally placing a few "wooden ducks" on the edge of our blind, that it might have the appearance of a floating log occupied by birds. The day was ideal for a successful shoot, snow was sifting through the atmosphere, developing into a light blanket of flakes, which bewildered the birds, driving them into our decoys, and eliminating preliminary flights and circles. They fell in. Early dawn and the first guns, cracked together. The rush of birds from deep water was on, it was a busy time in our batteries. Congealing snow, anchored us to the sink boxes, by ice adhesions. Our guns were freed from ince by rapid shooting. We were slightly uncomfortable but absolutely satisfied with our surroundings. We cased to be pacifists and were shooting for meat, much needed at about one half mile off shore, safely staked down to insure stability.

Judge Cummings' Narrow Escape When Big Bass Pulls Him Into Creek

Sunbury, Pa.. July 5.—Herbert W. Cummings, of Sunbury, president judge of the Northumberland county courts, was rescued from drowning to-day by Edward V. Nicely, of Sunbury, a former register of wills and recorder of deeds.

The two men were fishing in Penn's Creek, near Selinsgrove, when Judge Cummings hooked a bass. In playing it he slipped off a stone, and was soon floundering in twenty feet of water. Without hesitation, according to friends, Nicely, who weighs more than 200 pounds, jumped into the stream and after much effort succeeded in pulling the judge to safety. Cummings was uninjured. The bass did not escape. When the rod was recovered it was found to be securely hooked and when weighed tipped the scales at two pounds.
