

Build Monuments to Commemorate Work of Yanks in Argonne
By Associated Press.
Verden July 7.—Monuments to commemorate the achievements of the Americans in the battle of the Argonne are being built, details of the work being attended to by different army units.

A series of concrete monuments adorned with German machine guns and in some instances with German helmets and rifles has been put up to mark the front line of a division advance or to tell of the capture of a certain village by some regiment. Most of the monuments are being placed in prominent places near the main roads, when possible, so that they will serve as guide posts for tourists visiting the scenes where the Americans fought their greatest battle on French soil.

To Open School For Training of Waiters
London, July 7.—The dearth of good English waiters has prompted the Loyal British Waiters and Chefs Society to open a school for the training of boys in the trade. Applicants will be admitted to classes where they will hear lectures by famous cooks, and where they will be educated in languages and deportment. During the war, waiters were largely displaced by women who, through their attractiveness and strict attention to their work, bid fair to retain their positions, making a higher standard for the male attendant necessary.

To Exchange Bolsheivk Admiral For British Sailors in Russia
London, July 7.—British naval authorities are hoidint at Helsingkoff the Bolsheivk "Admiral Raskellinkoff, to exchange him and his side aide-camp for twenty-two British sailors who have been prisoners in Russia for some time. Raskellinkoff was captured when a Russian destroyer was taken by the British while engaged in laying mines in the Baltic. When the British first proposed his exchange for twenty-two sailors, the Bolsheivki demurred on the ground that the exchange was not fair by the "Admiral's" wife interferred, and persuaded them to make the exchange.
