**Inc.**, "Don't you remember me, Mrs. Harrison? I'm Mrs. Stoughton. We met when you were spending the week-end at Mason Towers. I don't think I know this nice young man though?" the woman who had appeared so suddenly at our table raced through her sentences with the effect of being perpetually out of breath.

"How do you do, Mrs. Stoughton," I said, conscious that Evyy was hurrying Jim desperately in and out of gasps on the dance floor as if she were in a great rush to come to us. She seemed to be trying to signal something, but Evyy's motolistic and true love to gether"—"I know," broke in Evyy at last, managing to stem the flood of eloquence. while he was waiting outside for "Poor old Cosby!" said Jim, his face inscrutable even to me as I waited breathlessly for his reaction to Evry's cruelty and the hideousness of what she had hinted about "Poor old Cosby!" he murmured again. Then he turned to Evry and his eyes challenged hers — held them. "Do you mean to insinuate that the poor creature out in that asylum is still alive?"

Herlin, July $, — Richard Calwer, finerical with the park while I stay here with Miss Bassett anyway," she supplies her enemies with a weapon which may encourage them to force her to pay a still Jarger sum than that offered. He writes:

(armany, they will say, appears to be still quite solvent and he' credit quinimpaired if she is able to offer a gold indemnity of one hundred billion on her own initiative. If she volunteers that much, she is in reality capable of exceeding that limit, will be the enemies' logic, and it is surprising to think this had not occurred before to men responsible for the offer."

While he was waiting outside beckened him up the steps.

she would not have gone with Mrs. Bassett.

Then he called himself a fool and tried to bring back a little of the indignation he had felt only an hour ago at Miss Leighton's displeasure. But it was useless. He really could not blame her for having been displeased. And anyway, even if she had been unjust, she had every excuse for being so.

Only once did Mrs. Bassett speak. This was as she parted from Smith at her daughter's house.

"Thank you for a refreshing and pleasant drive," she said.
Then, before he could guess her intention, she pressed a dollar bill into his hand, and started into the house.

But David hurried after her and

But David hurried after her and stopped her at the door.

"Pardon me, madam," lifting his hat and holding the bill out to her.

"I cannot take this."

She answered him with a majesterial wave of the hand.

friends' chauffeurs when they take me driving."

Before he could protest further, she swept past him into the door that a maid held open for her.

David returned to the car, amused and indignant. Yet what else could he expect?

Later, as he drove Desirce Leighton uplown, they had to wait at one of the cross streets, where there was a block in the traffic.

David took his opportunity to toss his dollar "tip" into the box of a young woman wearing the Salvation Army hat. He hoped that his companion had not seen the action, but a moment later she commenced upon it.

"That was not my money," he said confusedly. "I mean—it was only a dollar that had been given me—as a tip. And I did not want it. I do not receive tips."

Desiree regarded him admiringly. Surely this man had a fine sense of the proprieties.

"I never forbade your receiving money from my friends," she said. "Some employers do forbid it. But I am glad you appreciate that it is not quite the thing to receive tips."

"I think it is not quite the thing to give them," he said with a little smile she did not understand.

And, as she did not understand, she made no reply.
