

BANISH MILITARY RULE FROM KOREA

Only Hope of Restoring Peace there, Japanese Believe

Tokio, July 9.—That all aspects of military rule should be completely banished from Korea, is the opinion of representative Japanese. Thus only, they say, can Japan hope to re-establish peace and order among the Korean people.

It is generally admitted here that the disaffection is not removed, but merely quiescent, ready to burst forth anew once the existing military pressure is removed. Institution of a civilian government and removal of the present gendarme police system are believed here to be necessary. The gendarms are held responsible for cases of brutality and mistreatment, the soldiers being only responsible, it is declared, for the killing of Koreans in the Christian church at Cheamni. In this case, says the Herald of Asia, a Japanese policeman had been murdered, and his body mutilated. The gendarms told the arriving soldiers an exaggerated story, says the newspaper, and the young troops joined the gendarms in a massacre of the people.

Once the gendarmic method of policing the peninsula is removed, and the people given more local autonomy, such as the villages of Japan enjoy, the newspaper thinks the Koreans may see that their best interests lie in the peaceful acceptance of things as they are.

Responsible organs of opinion here favor making Korea an integral part of the Japanese empire politically, as it already is territorially. Korea, they conceive, might be made a province of Japan, with a civil governor and proper representation in the Japanese Diet. But before this is possible, the newspapers think, the Koreans must pass through the necessary education and show themselves prepared for selfgovernment.

U. S. Navy Officer Who Will be Aboard the R-34 on Flight Across the Ocean

Uncle Sam's Navy is to have a representative on board the giant British dirigible R-34 when the first attempt is made to cross the Atlantic in a lighter than air machine. Lieutenant Zachary Lansdowne will be on the R-34 when it leaves London for Roosevelt Field, Mineola, Long Island. The big air-ship is ready to start, London dispatches state, as soon as weather conditions are favorable.

Local Militia Ready For Annual Encampment

Officers and men of Company I, Pennsylvania Reserve Militia, are busy making preparations to attend the annual encampment of the Militia, at Camp Henderson, Mt. Gretna, commencing next Saturday. Three officers and 60 men from this city are included in the Company, which has been recruited to full strength. Captain Paul Harm is the commanding officer with First Lieutenant Frank Fahnestock, Jr., and Second Lieutenant S. F. Bruker as the other commissioned officers. Tents and other camp equipment are already being shipped from the State Arsenal here, that it might be placed in sufficient time for the arrival of the troops on Friday. An advance detail will be sent to assist in placing the materials in position. Major John Coolbaugh, of Allentown, will be in charge of this work which will start on Thursday morning.

Company I will leave this city about 2 o'clock Friday afternoon, reporting at brigade headquarters late in the afternoon. The men will take with them only such articles as will be needed in field service, overcoats being left behind. New Springfield rifles were recently issued to the men.

Pershing Awards 21 Service Crosses

Washington, July 9.—General Pershing notified the War Department to-day that, acting for President Wilson, he had awarded Distinguished Service Crosses to 21 officers and men. They included: Sergeants Albert C. Meyer, (deceased), Jeanette, Pa.; Lan D. McVicar, Norfolk, Conn.; and Tracy S. White, Long Branch, N. J., and Private William B. Main, Rouseville, Pa.

AGRA IS WORLD FAMOUS

London — If it did not contain the Taj Mahal, the most beautiful building in the world, Agra would still be famous because of the Pearl mosque. No nation but India could have produced Shah Jahan, the connoisseur and dreamer, with power and resources to command the services of world-famous artists. The combination produced the Pearl mosque and the other treasures of Agra.

The glistening white monuments of Shah Jahan appear more beautiful by contrast with India's swarming, reeking, dust-laden cities. The Pearl mosque is a palace of mosques. Its pointed gilt domes are lined with shining white marble, and below are delicately fashioned arches and cloister walls. White marble pillars meet overhead in scalloped arches, which lead the eye up to the vaulted ceiling.

The effect is unimpaired by furniture or decoration. Everything is simple and shell-like, as if a dreamer had evolved the misty outlines of a temple and the dream had suddenly materialized in white marble. A long slab of black marble bears the inscription title of the mosque. Shah Jahan likened the finished temple to a pearl without price. So it became "the Pearl mosque of Agra." The temple has the smooth whiteness and iridescence of a pearl, but the lines suggest rather a great white flower with curving petals, adapted into a dream temple by a master dreamer.
