The Wonderful Stories, of C

Tik-Tok the Machine Man

After an hour or so most of the band of Wheelers rolled back into the forest, leaving only three of their number to guard the hills. These curled themselves up like big dogs and pretended to go to sleep on the sands; but neither Dorothy nor Billina were fooled by this trick, so they remained in security among the rocks and paid no attention to their cunning enemics.

Finally the hen, fluttering over the mound, exclaimed: "Why, here's a path!"

the mound, exclaimed: "Why, here's a path!"

So Dorothy at once clamored to where Billina sat, and there, sure enough, was a smooth path cut between the rocks. It seemed to wind around the mound from top to bottom, like a cork-screw, twisting here and there between the rough boulders but always remaining level and easy to walk upon.

Indeed, Dorothy wondered at first why the Wheelers did not roll up this path; but when she followed it to the foot of the mound she found that several big pieces of rock had been placed directly across the end of the way, thus preventing any one outside from seeing it and also preventing the Wheelers from using it to climb up the mound.

Then Dquothy walked back up the path, and followed it until she came to the very top of the hill, where a solitary round rock stood that was bigger than any of the others surrounding it. The path came to an end just beside this great rock, and for a moment it puzzled the girl to know why the path had been made at all. But the hen, who had been gravely following her around and was now perched upon a point of rock behind Dorothy, suddenly remarked:

"It looks something like a door," "What looks like a door?" en-doesn't it?"

"What looks like a door?" enquired the child.

"Why, that crack in the rock, just facing you," replied Billina, whose little round eyes were very sharp and seemed to see everything. "It runs up one side and down the other, and across the top and the bottom."

"What does?"

"Why, the crack. So I think it must be a door of rock, although I do not see any hinges."

"Oh, yes," said Dorothy, now observing for the first time the crack in the rock. "And isn't this a keyhole, Billina?" pointing to a tound, deep hole at one side of the door.

"Of course. If we only had the key, now, we could unlock it and see what is there," replied the yellow hen. "May be it's a treasure chamber full of diamonds and rubles, or heaps of shining gold, or—", "Where is the key to the clockwork?" asked Billina.

"Hanging on the picked up on the shore, Do you think that it would fit this key-hole, Billina?"

"Try it and see," suggested the hen, so Dorothy searched in the pocket.

the shore. Do you think that it would fit this key-hole, Billina?"
"Try it and see," suggested the hen.

So Dorothy searched in the bocket of her dress and found the golden key. And when she had put it into the hole of the rock, and turned it, a sudden sharp snap was heard; then with a solemn creak that made the shivers run down the child's back, the face of the rock fell outward, like a door on hinges, and revealed a small dark chamber just inside.

"Good gracious!" cried Dorothy, shrinking back as far as the narrow path would let her.

For, stainding within the narrow chamber of rock, was the form of a man—or, at least, it seemed like a man, in the dim light, He was only about as tall as Dorothy herself, and his body was round as a ball and made out of burnished copper. Also his head and limbs were copper, and these were jointed or binged to his body in a peculiar way, with metal caps over the joints, like the armor worn by knights in days of old. He stood perfectly still, and where the light struck upon his form it glittered as if made of pure gold.

"Don't be frightened," called Billina, from her perch. "It isn't alive."

"I see it isn't," replied the girl, drawing a long breath.

"It's only made out of copper, like the old kettle in the banyard at the directions on the eard. "Which shall I wind up first?" the asked, looking again at the directions on the card. "Which shall I wind up first?" the asked, looking again at the directions on the card. "Number One, I should think," returned Billina. "That makes him think, doesn't it?"

"Yes," said Dorothy, and wound up Number One, under the left arm. "He doesn't seem any different," remarked the hen, critically. "Why, of course not; he is only thinking, now," said Dorothy.

"I'l wind up his talk and then perhaps he can tell us," said the girl. So she wound up Number Two, and isody except his lips:

"Good morn-ning, Mrs. Hen."

The words sounded a little hoarse and creakey, and they were uttered and reakey, and they were uttered and reakey. The proposed and the pr

"It's only made out of copper, like the old kettle in the barnyard at home." continued the hen, turning her head first to one side and then to the other, so that both her little round eyes could examine the object. "Once," said Dorothy, "I knew a man made out of tin who was born a real man and care was born a real man and the same was born a real man and care was born a real man and the same was born a real man and the same was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born a real man and the man the was born at the was born a

"That will please me ve-ry much," said the machine.

So she wound up Number Three, and at once the copper man in asomewhat stiff and jerky fashion walked out of the rock caven, took off his copper hat and bowed politely,

"From this time forth I am your obe-di-ent ser-vant. What-ev-er you command, that I will do willing-ly—if you keep me wound up.

"Do you lay your egg very early?"
asked Dorothy.
"About eight o'clock," said Billina.
"And everybody ought to be up by that time, I'm sure."
