Fear of Temptation to Escape Keeps Convicts From Taking Camp Jobs

Auburn. N. Y., July 16.—"Convicts in the oldest prison in use in New York State prefer to stay behind the bars rather than enjoy life in the open as workers in road camps." That is the strange announcement made to-day by State Superintendent of Prisons Charles F. Rattigan, who declared that the moral fear of the temptation to escape keeps prisoners at Auburn State Prison from accepting the free life of the road instead of the drab monotony inside the walls.

Auburn Prison is located in the Finger Lakes region and the gangs of convict highway builders are stationed at wild spots along the improved roads linking and circling the initiand lakes. Many,have made acquaintances in the summer colonies. Chances for a getaway are numerous. In this environ, the exceptional lure of the lake country to freedom, to independence and to recreation in the zone which was the playground of the Indian, actuates the men in declining to take a chance on resisting the temptation to flee, according to Superintendent Rattigan.

In virtually all cases where escapes have been effected from road camps, the convicts have later been apprehended. Their sentences were then extended. It is the grim fear of this possibility which the superintedent asserts is keeping the men in gray from the woods and glens and limpid waters of the Finger Lakes.
