Dorothy Opens the Dinner Pail

"Now Tiktok," said Dorothy, "the first thing to be done is to find a way for us to escape from these rocks. The Wheelers are down below, you know, and threaten to kill us."

"There is no reason to be afraid of the Wheelers," said Tiktok, the words coming more slowly than before.

"Why not?" she asked.

"Because they are as-g-g-g-gr-r-r-r."

He gave a sort of gurgle and stopped short, waving his hands frantically until suddenly he became motionless with one arm in the air and the other held stiffly before him with all the copper fingers of the hand spread out like a fan.

"Dear me," said Dorothy, in a frightened tone. "What can the matter be?"

"He's run down, I suppose," said the girl. "You couldn't have wound him up very tight."

"I didn't know how much to wind him," replied the girl; "but I'll try to do better next time."

She ran around the copper man to take the key from the peg at the back of his neck, but it was not there.

"It's gone!" cried Dorothy, in dismay.

"What's gone?" asked Billina.

"The key."

"It probably fell off when he made that low sound," returned the hen. "Look around, and see if you cannot find it again."

Dorothy looked, and the hen helped her, and as it would go around, discovered the clock-key which had fallen into a crack of the rock.

At once she wound up Tiktok's voice, taking care to give the key as many turns as it would go around. She found this quite a task, as you may imagine if you have ever tried to wind a clock, but the machine man's first word were to assure Dorothy that he would now run for at least twenty-four hours.

"You did not wind me much, at first," he calmly said, "and I told you that long story about King Ev-ol-do; so it is no wonder that I ran down."

She next rewound the action clock-work, and then Billina advised her to carry the key to Tiktok in her pocket, so it would not get lost again.

"And now," said Dorothy, when all this was accomplished, "tell me what you were going to say about the Wheelers."

"Why, they are nothing to be frightened at," said the machine man. "They try to make folks believe that they are very ter-ri-ble, but as a matter of fact the Wheelers are harmless enough to any one that dares to fight them. They might try to hurt a little girl like you, per-haps, because they are very mis-chiev-ous. But if I had a club they would run a-way as soon as they saw me."

"Haven't you a club?" asked Dorothy.

"No," said Tiktok.

"And you won't find such thing among these rocks, either, declared the yellow hen.

"Then what shall we do?" asked the girl.

"Wind up my time-works tight-ly, and I will try to think of some other plan," said Tiktok.

So Dorothy rewound his thought machinery, and while he was thinking she decided to eat her dinner. Billina was already pecking away at the cracks in the rocks, to find something to eat. So Dorothy sat down

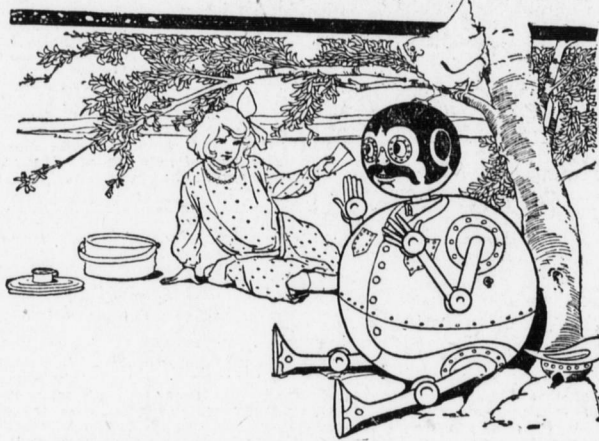

Ev-ol-do, used to carry a whip with him, when he walked out, to keep the crea-tures in order. When I was first made the Wheelers tried to run over me, and but for my brains, but they soon found I was built of too solid a mat-ter-ial for them to in-jure."

"You seem very durable," said Dorothy. "Who made you?"

"The firm of Smith and Tin-ker in the town of Ev-na, where the roy-al

"Nonsense!" snapped Billina. "It is true," declared Dorothy. "I met him in the Land of Oz, and he travelled with me to the city of the great wizard of Oz, so as to get some brains, for his head was stuffed with straw. But it seemed to me that he thought just as well before he got his brains as he did after he had them. I don't believe it to be true that rubbish about the Land of Oz?"

The firm of Smith and Tin-ker in the town of Ev-na, where the roy-al

and opened her tin dinner-pail.

In the cover she found a small tank that was full of very nice lemonade. It was covered by a cup, which might also, when removed, be used to drink the lemonade from. Within the pail were three slices of turkey, two slices of cold tongue, some lobster salad, four slices of bread and butter, a small custard pie, an orange and nine large strawberries, and some nuts and raisins. Singularly enough, the nuts in this dinner-pail grew already cracked, so that Dorothy had no trouble in picking out their meats to eat.

She spread the feast upon the rock beside her and began her dinner, first offering some of it to Tiktok, who declined because, as he said, he was merely a machine. Afterward she was offered to share with Billina, but the hen murmured something about "dead things" and said she preferred her bugs and ants.

"Do the lunch-box trees and the dinner-pail trees belong to the Wheelers?" the child asked Tiktok, while engaged in eating her meal.

"Of course not," he answered.

"They belong to the roy-al fam-ily of Ev, on-ly of course there is no roy-al fam-ily just now because King Ev-ol-do jumped into the sea and his wife and ten children have been transformed by the Nome King. There is no one to rule the Land of Ev, for this rea-son that the Wheel-ers claim the trees for their own, and pick the lunch-boxes and dinner-pails to eat them-selves. But they be-long to the King, and you will find the roy-al 'E' stamped up on the bot-tom of every tin-dinner-pail."

Dorothy turned the pail over, and at once discovered the royal mark upon it, as Tiktok had said.

"Are the Wheelers the only folks living in the Land of Ev?" enquired the girl.

"No; they only in-hab-it a small por-tion of it just back of the woods," replied the machine man. "But they have al-ways been mis-chiev-ous and im-per-ti-nent, and my old mas-ter, King pal-ace stands," answered Tiktok.

"Did they make many of you?" asked the child.

"No; I am the only au-to-mat-ic me-chan-ical man they ever com-plect-ed," he replied. "They were very won-der-ful in-ven-tions, were my mak-ers and quite ar-tis-tic in all they did."

"I am sure of that," said Dorothy.

"Do they live in the town of Ev-na now?"

"They are both gone," replied the machine man. "Mr. Smith was an art-ist as well as an in-ven-tor, and he painted a pic-ture of a riv-er, which was so nat-ur-al that, as he was reach-ing a-cross it to paint some flow-ers on the op-po-site bank, he fell into the wa-ter and was drowned."

"Oh, I'm sorry for that!" exclaimed the little girl.

"Mis-ter Tin-ker," continued Tiktok, "make a lad-der so tall that he could rest the end of it against the moon, while he stood on the highest rung and picked the lit-tle stars to set in the points of the king's crown. But when he got to the moon Mis-ter Tin-ker found it such a love-ly place that he de-cid-ed to live there, so he pulled up the lad-der af-ter him and we have never seen him since."

"He must have been a great loss to this country," said Dorothy, who was by this time eating her cus-tard pie.

"He was," acknowledged Tiktok. "Also he is a great loss to me. For if I should get out of or-der I do not know if any one a-ble to re-pair me, because I am so com-plect-ed. You have no i-de-a how full of ma-chin-er-y I am."

"I can imagine it," said Dorothy, readily.

"And now," continued the machine man, "I must stop talk-ing and be-gin think-ing a-gain of a way to es-cape from this rock." So he turned half way around, in order to think with-out being dis-turbed.

"The best thinker I ever knew," said Dorothy, to the yellow hen, "was a scarecrow."

"What rubbish!" asked the child, who was now finishing her nuts and raisins.

"I know, your impossible stories about animals that can talk, and a tin woodman who is alive and scarce-ly who can think," said Dorothy. "They are all there," said Dorothy, "for I have seen them."

"I don't believe it!" cried the hen, with a toss of her head.

"That's 'cause you're so is'ra'nt," replied the Ev-na girl, a little of-fend-ed at her friend Billina's speech.

"In the Land of Oz," remarked Tiktok, turning toward them, "any-thing is pos-si-ble. For it is a won-der-ful coun-try."

"There, Billina! what did I say?" cried Dorothy. And then she turned to the machine and asked in an eager tone, "Do you know the Land of Oz, Tiktok?"

"No; but I have heard a-bout it," said the copper man. "For it is on-ly a few miles from this Land of Ev by a broad de-ert."

Dorothy clasped her hands to-gether delightedly.

"I'm so glad of that!" she ex-claimed. "It makes me quite happy to be so near my old friends. The scarecrow I told you of, Billina, is the King of the Land of Oz."

"Par-don me? He is not the king now?" said Tiktok.

"He was when I left there," de-clared Dorothy.

"I know," said Tiktok, "but there was a revo-lu-tion in the Land of Oz, and the scare-crow was de-posed by a sol-dier woman named Gen-er-al Jin-jur. And then Jin-jur was de-posed by a lit-tle girl named Oz-ma, who was the right-ful heir to the throne and now rules the land un-der the title of Oz-ma of Oz."

"That is news to me," said Dorothy. "But I don't know a lot of things have hap-pened since I left the Land of Oz. I wonder what has be-come of the Scare-crow, and of the Tin Woodman and the Cowardly Lion. And I wonder who this girl Oz-ma is, for I never heard of her before."

But Tiktok did not reply to this. He had turned around again to re-sume his think-ing.

Dorothy packed the rest of the food back into the pail, so as not to be run-ning out of good things, and the yellow hen forgot her dig-nity far enough to pick up all of the scat-tered crumbs, which she ate rather greedily, although she had so lately pretended to despise the things that Dorothy preferred as food.

By this time Tiktok approached them with his stiff bow.

"I'm kind en-ough to fol-low me," he said, "and I will lead you a-way from here to the town of Ev-na, where you will be more com-for-table, and also I will pro-tect you from the Wheel-ers."

"All right," answered Dorothy promptly. "I'm ready!"

Editor's Note.—Our next story "The Heads of Langwiders." You ask "who is Langwiders?" Well, she is the Princess who rules in the Land of Ev. We shall take you with us to the Land of Ev, but be prepared for a little excitement with the Wheelers. Tik-tok proves they are harmless, however, and our journey is bound to be a delightful one.

REGENT
 To-day—Charlie Ray in "Greased Lightning," and Sennett Comedy, "Hearts and Flowers." Monday and Tuesday, John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor." Wednesday and Thursday, Dorothy Dalton in "The Homebreaker." Friday and Saturday, Bryant Washburn in "Venus of the East."

PAXTANG PARK
 Vaudeville.—The show every evening. This week's bill at the Majestic Theater is going bigger at each showing. We mean the Hickman Brothers, who present something different entitled "Blackface Art." Last night they were called back by the audience eight times. The show rocked with laughter from the time they stepped on the stage until the final curtain was pulled.

The entire bill is exceptionally good, starting with the first act entitled "The Three Friends." At 2 o'clock the Forty Singing Sailors will give a concert at this theater under the direction of Jerry Swineford, leader. This is considered one of the greatest attractions ever offered the people of Harrisburg. The admission fee has not been increased.

Last week Herbert Clifton, considered the greatest female impersonator playing in vaudeville to-day, was featured at this theater. He was formerly the hit of the season with "Ziegfeld Follies."

When people of the high finance world look for a good time tradition has it that they seek the tenderloin or places frequented by people who are not as fortunate as they. When this opportunity presents itself, there is always a chance for the woman with brains, nerve and intelligence. Such a woman is Mary Regan. And Mary Regan is no other than the petite Anita Stewart, star of "A Midnight Romance," which is playing at the Vic-

At the Colonial

Norma Talmadge is being featured to-day only at the Colonial Theater in "Going Straight," in conjunction with the showing of the film taken at Bowman and Company's recent annual picnic held at Good Hope Mill. There was lots of comment yesterday about this film. While it was showing yesterday afternoon, someone suddenly shouted "There she is," and a child who had been evidently seen her sister going through some antic.

Monday and Tuesday Madge Kennedy appears in "The Wrong Door." Wednesday and Thursday Constance Talmadge will be shown in "Happiness a la Mode."

At the Regent
 Monday and Tuesday Madge Kennedy appears in "The Wrong Door." Wednesday and Thursday Constance Talmadge will be shown in "Happiness a la Mode."

Admirers of Charles Ray will find special delight in his new play, "Greased Lightning," at the Regent to-day, for the first time. Charles Ray, N. C., was the name of the story is derived from a racing auto, and Mr. Ray plays the part of the village blacksmith who is the inventive genius of the comedy.

You will like the Mack-Sennett comedy "Hearts and Flowers." The charm of the picture is said to be its extreme novelty, while the fun is fast and furious from start to finish.

Appearing in one of the strongest roles in which he has appeared on the screen, John Barrymore will be seen in his latest photoplay "The Test of Honor," at the Regent next Monday and Tuesday.

In this charming photoplay Mr. Barrymore appears as a convict whose career is ruined by a ferocious woman whom he loved. Several of the most dramatic incidents transpire presumably at country club, and a famous clubhouse at Piping Rock, N. C., was employed for the purpose, with excellent effect.

Two Badly Injured in Marine Strike Clash
 By Associated Press.
 New York, July 19.—A slight increase in the number of vessels tied up in New York harbor by the strike of firemen, oilers and water tenders was reported to-day. Similar reports were received from other Atlantic ports. A few coastwise steamers were in service due to their owners having signed an agreement with the strikers. In addition to the strikers and allied employees thrown out of work by the strike the number of unemployed was increased by the longshoremen and hundreds of teamsters and freight handlers left idle by the embargo on all shipments intended for export or for transfer by water to other domestic ports.

One man was shot and probably will die and another left seriously injured in a clash today between strikers and strike breakers on the Brooklyn water front.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR
 To the Editor of the Telegraph:
 The program selected by the Municipal Park for the concert at Reservoir Park on Thursday evening was one very happily suited for a park audience, and especially well rendered by an exceptionally good band, the members responding with a dash and vim to able leadership. It had in the credit to the city and fund should be created by voluntary contributions from citizens to put the organization on a sound financial basis and make it a municipal band in fact as well as name.

The same cannot be said of the audience. While a large number of the people were there to listen and enjoy the music, there is a great deal of pleasure was an equally large number, and it is all the more to their discredit, for they were seemingly sensible persons. Had they put the same effort in the singing as they did in talking, the singing would have been a great success.

I understand smoking throughout the audience is a thing which the Commissioner instruct the park guards who, let us say, lean against the trees, to abate the talking nuisance within the area prescribed for the concert.

There is no mistaking the song of this bird, and it is rendered in a variety of ways which make it sound like any one of the following: "Which-is-it? which-is-it?" or "Which-a-pity, what-a-pity?" or "Which-way-sir? which-way-sir?" or "I-beech-you, I-beech-you;" or "Witchery, witchery, witchery."
