At that hour the wedding party stepped off the elevator. There were flowers and smills and just a little bit of laughter. A reporter stepped out on the scene. "I must see the bride," said the proce of ceremony, the destination of the honeymooners and other in formation the public delights to read in connection with wedding stories. The reporter waited. Mean-while delegates to the Elliott-Fisher convention, female members of the clerical force of the company and several women, who happened to be in the vicinity of Parlor D, slacken-ed their speed to see what was go-ing on. "The bride desires no pub-licity," said the groom to the re-porter. It was learned afterward that the groom was William A. Walsh, an accountant of Jersey City and the bride Miss Anna Lor-raine Walsh, a Harrisburg school teacher.
