"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

BY ANN LISLE CHAPTER CCLIII. Copyright, 1919, King Features Syndicate, Inc. Before the little enamel clock on my desk had marked off five minutes, Jim returned. In those five minutes I had hurried out of my wrinkled uniform and was sitting, wrapped in my new orchid negligee, brushing my hair, when he limped wearily into the room and flung himself down on the chaise longue. Not one of those minutes had been marked by jealousy of Valerie Cosby. I felt a glorious certainty that Jim was mine and that Val couldn't touch him. I wasn't jealous. I was happy. Jim's first words justified me. "Some one ought to tell Val to cut out her Egyptian-urn, Russian-dancer, baby-vamp stuff," he said grinning at me humbly. "She overdoes it. What's the point of all this heavy incense and shut-up rooms? Me for the clean outdoors. Come over here and give a fellow a sun-bath in that soft hair of yours, Lilac Lady."

and ran from the room, flinging back a little cry: "Let me go. Please let me go." Virginia's face pinched in at the nostrils and whitened for a second. Then she turned to us with a suave word of explanation: "She has a headache. I shouldn't have asked her to get out of bed. Just forget the little episode, will you please? And now, Tony—won't you go on with Betty's letter? Brave, splendid Betty—we must all stand by!" Tony looked at her gravely for a moment. "We have also to stand by the people who aren't brave," he said without any special emphasis. "Then he went on reading. And my mind followed a little girl who was trying hard to be brave. What was she doing alone in her room? Who was going to stand by her?" To Be Continued.

Would Make It Unlawful to Possess Liquor in Private Houses; Some Objections

How to Look and Feel Bright in Hot Weather

When depressed by the heat and you get washed up for the afternoon or evening, just bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of pure powdered sassafras in a half pint of witch hazel. You will find this more refreshing than an hour's rest. As a wrinkle-remover the sassafras lotion is remarkably successful. Its action is most magic. The deepest furrows, as well as the finest lines—whether due to age, illness, whether or worry—are immediately affected. Enlarged pores are reduced, flabby skin is drawn in, facial contour is improved wonderfully. The simple ingredients of course can be had at any drugstore, and you need not hesitate to try the lotion, as it will not harm any skin in the least.

LIFE'S PROBLEMS ARE DISCUSSED

By MRS. WILSON WOODROW. The cleverest of us are going to be cheated now and then; the wisest of us will make mistakes in our estimates of persons with whom we are thrown; the most generous of us will occasionally find our confidence abused. These being facts, they might as well be accepted without too much heartburning and resentment. A woman has written me a letter in which she relates an unfortunate circumstance, where, through an act of friendship on her part, and acting in all good faith, she yet found herself the loser in money, in self-esteem and in her faith in her fellow beings. "I shall never again trust a man or woman," she says, and it is no doubt a very natural remark for her to make. But in trying to carry out such a vow she will find that she is imposing more punishment on herself than on those who have wronged her. She will virtually penalize herself for she will have to shut herself completely off from the world and to live in an attitude of continual suspicion. She will embitter and narrow her life until it will be impossible to make or retain any friendship whatever. Life is a matter of give and take, and we've got to take the good with the bad, the sour with the sweet, and make the best of it. A man once told me of a method by which he kept his faith in his fellows. It happened that when he was a young man, and following the advice of all the all-thrift mentors, he set himself to lay up a hundred dollars. Three dollars a week was all he could spare from his earnings, and each of those three dollars meant something he had given up for the sake of saving. When he finally completed the amount, he felt as if he owned the earth. It represented the foundation of success in life to him. Then his best friend asked him to lend him the amount, promising to pay it back within a certain time and with interest. The friend lost the money, however, and to this day has never returned it. Yet in spite of this disillusionizing experience, the man again and with the same self-denial, a little sterner, this time, saved up another hundred. No sooner had he done so than he learned that a girl whom he had known all his life was making a terrific struggle. Then ensued an equally terrific struggle with himself. On the one side he had reason to believe that his treasured hundred dollars would tide the girl over an especially rough place and enable her to get on her feet. On the other hand, he could not fail to remember his first experience in loaning to the apparently needy. However, in the end, he insisted on the girl taking his money. She justified his belief in her, for she did get on her feet, and stayed there. She repaid the money, and also his generosity with her eternal gratitude. And he, in turn, grateful for his restored faith in humanity, dedicated that hundred dollars to any one in need. He has prospered and grown rich since that time and has given large sums in charity, but he says that nothing ever given or gained has yielded him one-half the happiness that does that hundred, which he keeps always loaned to some person struggling in the mire of circumstances. Time and again it has helped a lame dog over a stile, set some one up in business, given a man or a woman a chance, or has kept the wolf from some door. He asserts that it has rarely failed to come back, and that he can never measure the returns of good-will if he has brought him. It has sweetened and broadened his life in ways he never dreamed possible, given him friends in unlooked for places, and has shown him qualities he would never have suspected in those he has thus learned to know. He is very positive and unwavering in his belief that the good far outweighs the bad in this world. Some one has said that all we can carry out of the world with us is that which we have given away. It would have been the easiest way for this man after his first disappointment to have accepted the point of view of the woman who has written me, and to have resolved never to trust any one, man or woman, again. But he was big enough, and generous and clear-sighted enough to have intuitively grasped the fact that such a belief strongly held would eventually bankrupt him in money, in friends and in everything that makes life worth while. He might have been playing a hundred-to-one shot in his second venture, but he staked everything on his belief in human nature, and it won. It's a perfectly safe game. You will lose now and then inevitably, but you will win many, many more times than you lose.
