Mrs. Wood Says That Several Inventions Are Necessary to Perfect Aerial Travel

MRS. ANNA H. WOOD

The above cut just arrived from Philadelphia shows Mrs. Anna Hamilton Wood, the first Harrisburg woman to travel in the air, standing beside a Curtiss airplane in the Warmensh Field. Her experience in the clouds were told in Saturday night's Telegraph, but she feels that no words can really express her wonderful sensations.

Mrs. Wood claims that there are several important inventions necessary to perfect the convenience of aerial travel: a noiseless engine (which Germany claims to have discovered since the close of the war), a self-starting propeller, an easily opened life belt with individual parachute in case of disaster, and the ability to hop off or alight at any given point thus doing away with the present running start across level ground.
