

ARMY PROGRAM WOULD COST MUCH

General March Declares It Would Require Nine Billion Dollars

Washington, Aug. 8.—The permanent military policy recommended by the War Department, involving under revised estimates, a standing peace army of 575,000 and universal military training for youths of nineteen years of age, would cost the country $900,000,000 annually.

General March, who appeared as the first witness in behalf of the department's bill, was unable to conclude his statement yesterday and will appear again tomorrow. Secretary Baker will present his views to the committee next week, and General Pershing and other experts later.

General March said inquiries made by him during a recent inspection trip over the country showed that the present draft system has resulted in men being turned out better physically and morally than when they entered the service.

Secretary Baker has been asked to appear before the committee next Thursday while General Pershing will also appear upon his return from France.
