In pulling, hauling or plowing it will do the work of 9 heavy horses, yet it weighs less than 3 and can be handled as easily as 3. It will pull 3-14 inch bottoms in stiff plowing and is light erough for discing, harrowing and seeding. It will turn short so it will work well up into the corners.

When used for belt power, it will drive a mediumly large separator, furnish power for feed cutting, silo filling, baling, shredding and sawing. The power is delivered to the belt direct from band wheel at end of crankshaft; this insures a maximum of power with a minimum of loss and a consequent saving in fuel.

The Frick Tractor will burn kerosene or gasoline. It gives full efficiency on either fuel. When burning cheap kerosene the Frick excels ordinary motors because it does not use more kerosene than gasoline and it virtually remains clean and free from carbon wher cheap kerosene is used.

The Frick is entirely practical in design with maximum power, but light in weight consistent with durability. It is adapted to the needs of the farmer who is not looking for the cheapest in first cost, but the tractor that will provide the widest range of service with the smallest upkeep

Washington, Aug. 9.—Members of Congress are to-day giving sober thought to President Wilson's address yesterday on the high cost of living. Although without little indication of what action would be taken, varying comment on the address is for the most part favorable. Although some Senators and Representatives disagreed with some of the President's specific recommendations, there was an almost unanimous expression that his address probably would have a beneficial effect on conditions. His references to sober second thought on the part of labor leaders were generally approved.

Confession of

proved.

Republican Leader Mondell, in the House, however, characterized the President's address as a "confession" that the administration had failed to realize the seriousness of the situation and use its powers to curb it. Speaker Gillett declared he found little thoughtful suggestion in the address.

found little thoughtful suggestion in the address.

Peace Times Must Return
President Wilson laid several spe-cific proposals before Congress for checking the high cost of living, but at the same time declared per-manent results could not be expect-ed until peace time basis were fully restored by ratification of the Peace Treaty.

ed until peace time bass were and restored by ratification of the Peace Treaty.

High prices, the President told Congress, were not justified by shortage of supply, either present opposed to the large part for extricially and deliberately," by "vicious practices." Retailers, he said, were responsible in large part for extortionate prices. Strikes, the President warned the labor world, would only make matters worse, and those who sought to employ threats or coercion were only "preparing their own destruction." Leaders of organized labor, the President said, he was sure would presently yield to second sober thought.

"Illegal" and "criminal" were the words the President used in characterizing the methods by which some present-day prices have been brought about.

Present laws, he said, would be energetically employed to the limit to force out food hoards, and mest the situation so far as possible, but to supplement the existing statutes he specifically urged enactment of new laws.

The President had no panacea to new laws.

The President had no panacea to suggest. Frankly the stated that there is no complete immediate remedy to be had from legislation that the state of the what we remedy to be had from legislation and executive action, but what we can do we should do and do at once," he added.

He told Congress that the surplus stocks of army food and clothing will be sold at once; that surplus stocks in private hands will be drawn out of storage; that suits will be instituted by the Department of Justice against combinations of producers and traders who control supplies and prices; that the public will be kept fully informed regarding supplies and prices, wholesale and retail, through the medium of the Government departments.

Congress Should Work

These are the steps which the

These are the steps which the Administration is taking to beat down the constantly rising cost of living and curb the upward trend of prices for the necessities of life. But Congress, too, should do its part, the President declared.

A stern admonition of organized labor to abandon its present method was by far the most important feature of the President's address. "There must be no threats," he said. "Let there be only intelligent counsel, and let the best reasons win, not the strongest brute force. All that is arbitrary and coercive is in the discard. Those who seek to employ it only prepare their own destruction."

struction."
For the first time during the entire reading of the address, the end of which he was approaching, Mr. Wilson seemed to strike a responsive son seemed to strike a responsive rd. His entire audience, Repubeans and Democrats, Senators and licans and Democrats, Senators and Representatives, applauded, and then cheered, and the galleries joined in applause unreproved by the two presiding officers.

Opposes Labor's Plan
When he continued that this country could not and would not over night revolutionize our economic life, the applause broke out again. It was made very evident to the various leaders of organized labor who sat in the galleries that their efforts to bluff the nationalization of the railroads through Congress efforts to bluff the nationalization of the railroads through Congress and then perhaps of all the other great basic industries, will fail.

The President obviously irritated the Republican Senators by making it clear at the very outset of his address and carried the idea throughout that he regarded the delay in the ratification of the peace treaty and the unwillingness to accept his covenant for a League of Nations as one of the underlying causes for the distress that is overpowering the world. He insisted that there is now neither peace nor war, and accordingly there could be no confidence in industry, no normal restoration of business and no resumption of the old commercial relations with Europe until peace had been established and guaranteed.

Should Provide Funds

Should Provide Funds

Should Provide Funds

First, the President said, on the food situation, Congress should provide the necessary funds to enable the executive branch to carry its plans into execution. He recommended as amendment to the food control Act "as the period of time during which it shall remain in operation and as to the commodities to which it shall apply."

Its provisions, the President said, should be made to apply to food-stuffs, fuel, clothing and to many other necessaries of life. It is now essentially a war measure but the President expressed his confidence that under the commerce clause of the constitution Congress has full authority to make it permanent. And he particularly suggested that the profiteering section of the Act be provided with a penalty for its enforcement.

Other recommendations of farreaching import were put forward by the President. He suggested that Congress pass a law regulating cold storage fashioned after the New Jersey law, limiting the time that goods may be held in cold storage and stipulating that goods released from storage should be labeled with the selling or market price when they went into storage.

Another radical suggestion was for the enforcement of a law under which all goods destined for interwhich all goods de

Ten Steps to Cut Living Costs

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

 $P^{ extit{RESIDENT WILSON}}$ in addressing Congress yesterday on the high cost of living, presented ten remedies which he thinks would reduce the cost of life's necessities. They are:

The passage of the Peace Treaty.

The sale of surplus stocks of both food and clothing in the hands of the Government.

The drawing out of storage and putting upon the market certain stocks in private hands.

The extension of the present food control act both as to the period of time during which it is to remain in operation and as to the commodities to which it shall apply.

The passage of a statute providing a penalty for profiteering.

The passage of a law regulating cold-storage as it is regulated by the laws of the State of New Jersey which limits the time during which goods may be kept in storage, prescribes the method of disposing of them if kept beyond the permitted period and requires that the goods released from storage shall bear the date of their receipt.

Passage of a law providing that all goods released from storage for interstate shipment should have plainly marked on each package the selling or market price at which they went into storage.

Provision of law providing that all goods destined for interstate commerce should in every case where packages make it possible, be marked with the price at which they left the hands of the producer.

Formulation of a law requiring a Federal license of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce and embodying in the license or in the conditions under which it is to be issued specific regulations designed to secure competitive selling and prevent unconscionable profit in the method of market.

Passage of the bill now pending before Congress proposed by the Capital Issues Committee for the control of security issues.

state shipment should be marked with the price at which they left the hands of the producer. He also advocated the adoption of a Federal license for all corporations eargaged in interstate commerce, with regulations compelling them to sell in competition. And he urged the passage of the bill now pending before Congress, and proposed by the Capital Issue Committee for control of security issue.

These constitute the principal points touched upon by the Presdent in his discussion of the cost of living and they were heard with deepest interest by Senators and Representatives who now Ind themselves confronted with a very important part in the task of providing a remedy for the food problem. Intertwined with these recommendations was an insistent plea for prompt ratification of the Peace Treaty. The President declared that until the war is formally closed and all nations are free to devote their energies to the tasks of peace, there con be no restoration of normal conditions.

that of most other countries, and that "we, and we almost alone, now hold the world steady."

Further, the President's address might be characterized as a remarkable personal appeal. It was an appeal which he hoped night bring speedy relief, for he frankly admitted there is no complete immediate remedy to be had from legislative or executive action.

He appealed to Congress for remedial legislation. He appealed to the profiteer to cease demanding exorbitant profits.

which evoked long and enthusiast; applause.

"There is no ground for some of the fearful forecasts I hear uttered about me," the President said, "but the condition of the world is unquestionably very grave and we should face it comprehendingly. It is in this supreme crisis, this crisis for all mankind, that America must prove her mettle," he continued. "In the presence of a world confused, distracted, she must show herself self-possessed, self-contained action."

To the covert threats of a general railroad strike if the demands of the brotherhoods for increased wages are rejected, President Wilson uttered this solemn warning:

"Passion and a disregard for the rights of others have no place in the counsels of a free people. We need light not heat, in these solemn times of self-examination and saving action. There must be no threats. Let there be only intelligent counsel and last under no other."

Against Plumb Plan

With a few vigorous words, which brought cheers from his hearers, he sounded absolutely the death knell of the so-called Plumb plan for government purchase of the railroads and operation by the comployes, so far as the present Congress is concerned.

In the same breath the President wilson himself seemed to place great reliance upon publicity will arouse the believes publicity will arouse the best proposed and the feath and the feath

In the same breath the President denounced those who seek in times like these to attain their ends by means of threats. That he had in mind the recent talk of some of the of the result we desire," he said.

All of the administration officers are convinced that if publicity will succeed in pointing out to every man and woman in the country that all must do their share in bringing down the cost of living, the slow methods of resorts to courts and legal process may not be necessary. The President himself believes that one or two court actions only may be necessary to bring all dealers and manufacturers into line with the new thought of fair profits and fair play.

For Fair Price Lists

He appealed to Congress for more money to enable Government agencies to investigate and publish the production price and a fair sale price of commodities in all communities.

He appealed to the consuming public, and especially the housewives of the country, to be more careful in their marketing, assuring them that the concerted action on their part can accomplish much.

He appealed, "with entire confidence" to producers, to middlemen and to merchants to deal fairly with the people.

He appealed, with great eloquence the appeared, with great eloquence, to the more extreme labor laders of the country to yield to a second sober thought and, "like the great mass of their associates, think and act like true Americans." Strikes, he declared, would make matters worse, not better

"We are all involved in the distressing results of the high cost of living," said the President, "and we must unite, not divide to correct it."

The President's plans and recommendations as to the high cost of living met a partisan reception, as was to be expected. His declarations that nothing approaching the normal could be accomplished until the world was officially at peace was loudly applauded by the Democrats. His resentment against attempted threats and his assertion that strikes would be fattal at a time like this brought wild applause from Democrats and Republicans alike.

The President was vigorously criti-"We are all involved in the dis-

Republicans alike.

The President was vigorously criticised by the Republicans for not having done long ago all the things he announced he proposed to do under existing laws. They accused him of remaining idle while vast stocks of food have been hoarded and stored when the means were at his disposal to prevent such action. The President himself told Congress how food stocks had accumulated during the last few months and how prices had continued to rise in the very face of the surplus supplies.

Ready for Speedy Action

Ready for Speedy Action

Congress as a whole seemed willing to agree on speedy action to give the President all the money he desires to prosecute profiteers and to give full force and effect to the powers already reposed in him by Congress. Many of the Republicans profess to believe the President has at his command all the means necessary to cope with the high cost of living. They say he can be convinced of this, just as he was convinced that he had sufficient power, to deal with all questions affecting railroad rates and wages

Power and Economy

A GAIN the Stephens Salient Six won the Annual Loss Angeles Economy Run. This year it traveled 21.4 miles for each gallon of fuel, and won over all watercooled cars by a 5-ton-mile margin. In 1918 the Stephens Salient Six made 21.5 miles per gal-Six made 21.5 miles per gal-lon of fuel and won over all cars entered for economy of gas, oil and water.

These records establish the Stephens Salient Six as the most economical motor car of its class. Such performance is the result of the Stephens perfected overhead valve engine, which is not only the most economical but also the most powerful engine of its size.

Briefly the superiority of the Stephens engine is due to its perfected overhead valve construction, its superior gas preparing and handling sys-tem and its unusually large valves.

And the Stephens Salient Six is just as beautiful and comfortable as it is powerful and economical. You are im-pressed by its beauty.

The open models of the Stephens Salient Six are of 2, 4, and 6 passengen capacity. This new American seating arrangement is logical, as more people motor in couples than otherwise, and in addition such construction lends itself to a long, low and narrow design which is extremely pleasing.

The owner of a Stephens Salient Six realizes to the fullest degree, the many advantages which a motor car can yield. Beauty-that's a treat to the eye. Comfort-that yields rest and decreation. Safety-which protects the occupants and safeguards the pedestrians. Reliability-which takes you over the hills; lets you creep at the crossings; leap across at the signal, and travel tirelessly for hours and days without lessened performance.

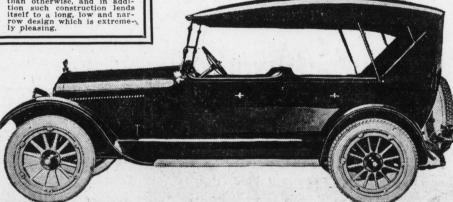

Such a car is the Stephens Salient Six.

We will gladly demonstrate to you any time. Call Bell 1003 for appointment.
