"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISIE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing with the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCLXXI.

When Jim came home I had his tuxedo hung out and had laid on his bed a pleated white shirt, fitted with studs and links. Across my chaise longue was my dinner dress of lavender chiffon.

"What's this? What's this?" asked Jim, passing his hand wearily across his forehead. "I'd clean forgotten this was the night for us to dine at the new roof garden with Neal and Phoebe. I'll have to buck up for the happy occasion."

"Neal's party isn't till day after tomorrow," I explained. "This is a nice little home dinner. Only we two and Daisy Condon and Carl Booth."

"Daisy?" repeated Jim irritably. "Hate the name—ugly flaunting thing. Who are these new people, anyway?"

Taking one thing at a time, I replied:

"She isn't ugly and flaunting—Daisy, I mean. She's sweet and simple. Like a shy wood-nymph. She's so quiet she even seems colorless at first. And Carl's an old friend, on the advertising staff of Haldane's. Don't you remember him? I was with him the night—"

"Oh, old business acquaintances," interrupted Jim. "Then we won't dress. It would only embarrass 'em. He'll probably come in blue serge and a red tie. And who's your shy Violet?"

"Daisy—types at Haldane's," I replied hesitatingly, starting to be overwhelmed, as usual, by the Harrison social superiority. Then, disgusted at such snobbery, I continued in a different strain: "Jim, these Haldane people were my friends before I knew you. Good friends, too. And I deserted them for you. Daisy told me to-day that her sister Kate—my best friend in the old days—died of influenza this winter. She wanted to see me before she went and they didn't know where she was. That being so, I'd like to make it up by being sweet to Kate's little sister."

"So that's it!" Jim's eyes flashed at me warningly. "You shall be good-mother to Cinderella if you like, dear. And I'll help. But it would be a rotten beginning to embarrass her within an inch of her life by all this flattery. I'll just wear a business suit to be in keeping with

TOO FAT ?

It is just possible that among the hundreds of over-stout ladies who have reduced 10 to 30 pounds and more, I can refer you to some in your own neighborhood who will be glad to tell you in confidence how they accomplished this result with comfort. I have no books, methods or apparatus to sell you, you like, piles of cheap, worthless drugs to send you. If you will cut out this notice and mail to me with your home address, I will tell you the truth about excess fat and how hundreds have rid themselves of it without trouble. Mrs. E. L. Robinson, A. 34, Middletown, Connecticut.

THE LOVE GAMBLER

CHAPTER XLIII.

"Samuel Leighton's daughter surely has a remarkable amount of faith in human nature," Jacob Perry reflected as he watched Desiree's graceful figure pass from the large store. "She takes it for granted that everybody in her employ or in her father's employ is honest. Yet somebody—either her maid or her chauffeur—stole that pendant and chain. Well," with a shrug of the shoulders "if she would rather have her faith in human nature than recover her property that is her affair—not mine—so long as down here we are operated from all blame. But I fancy her father may look at the matter from a different viewpoint."

"When?" She fairly bristled when I suggested that her new chauffeur might have taken the thing. "If I had a pretty daughter I don't believe I would quite care to have as good-looking a chap as that young man drive her about."

Desiree walked on up Fifth avenue, her mind in too much of a turmoil for her to think very clearly.

The pendant was gone. She regretted this, for it was very beautiful, and had been a gift from an old friend. But the loss of the pendant was not what was now disturbing her equanimity. It was the indubitable fact that it had been stolen, and that suspicion would be cast upon someone in her employ.

For, of course, the pendant had been taken from the box while this lay on her dressing table.

"Sifting the Evidence"

Norah and Annie both had access to her room. As she thought of Annie she almost smiled. Annie was too stupid and too unenterprising to think of opening the parcel. Moreover she was too clumsy to tie it up again as neatly as it had been tied at first.

The only other person was Norah. Carefully Desiree went back in her mind over Norah's fallings, her dissembling to Norah, displayed for the first time when she spoke of Smith. She had always behaved fairly well until lately, and even with her impertinence she was certainly honest. The girl had had scores of opportunities to pilfer money from her

A VERY ATTRACTIVE COSTUME

Waist 2867, Skirt 2874. This comprises waist pattern 2867 and skirt 2874. In linen, satin, taffeta, serge, or gabardine this combination is very desirable. One could have the waist of lawn, crepe or batiste, silk or satin, and the skirt of contrasting material.

The waist is cut in seven sizes, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34 and 36 inches bust measure. Size 26 will require three yards of 36 inch material. Width at lower edge is about 4 1/2 yards.

This illustration calls for two separate patterns which will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents for each pattern in silver or stamps.

Oil Shale Defined

"What is oil shale?" A' claims that, in Colorado, it is compacted ooze of a former inland marsh. It claims it is bituminized vegetable matter and organic remains of fossils from prehistoric times, evidence of which he has seen in the mountains near De Beque, Colorado. Is there more than one variety, each of different formation? H. B. P.

"New York."

Oil shale defines itself. It is a soft laminated or leaflike rock, formed by the effects of pressure and heat from deposits of clay and "rock flour," and containing more or less mineral oil, derived from some of the materials contained in the clay. In many regions, such as Southern California, the shale would appear to have come principally from the decomposition of diatoms, which are single-celled marine plants, microscopic in size, which swarmed in almost incredible numbers in the shallow seas and waters formerly covering regions where the shales are now found.

In various parts of the world vast deposits of diatom remains exist, sometimes many square miles in area and as much as fifty feet thick. Ehrenberg calculated that a single cubic inch of such rock contains the remains of no less than forty thousand million of these ancient organisms.

But there are many varieties of oil shale, depending for their precise composition upon the localities, the geological age, and the circumstances of their deposition. Some of them date back as far as the Devonian period, which was earlier than the "coal age," and during which most of the oil and gas of Pennsylvania and West Virginia are derived.

Even earlier than this, in the Ordovician period, which goes within one step of the beginning of geological history, oil rocks were formed, and Professor W. J. Miller says: "The great oil and gas field of Ohio and Indiana derives its principal supply from the Ordovician rocks, especially the Trenton limestone. The oil and gas were formed by the decomposition of the rich organic accumulation in the limestones.

In the Cretaceous and the Jurassic periods, millions of years later, and long after the "coal age," which term is conventionally limited to the Carboniferous period, deposits of oil shale were extensively formed, and it is possible that the decomposition of the abundant animal organisms of those times (which included the "age of the great reptiles") may have added something to the store of oily material in the clays, although the diatoms and similar minute marine plants continued, through all these ages, to flourish most abundantly in the waters, and probably constituted the principal source from which the oil was derived in Texas and Louisiana. The crustaceous deposits have been the principal source of oil and gas, and they have served a similar purpose in various places in the Western United States.

Again, in the Tertiary, the last of the great geologic periods before the present, oil shales were laid down in the form of clays at the bottom of shallow seas and other expanses of water, and notable among the tertiary deposits furnishing large quantities of oil are those of Southern California, although there oil is also obtained from Jurassic rocks.

So, you see there is, indeed, a great variety of oil shales. The business man is more interested in the questions of their locality, availability, productivity, etc., while the philosophic thinker finds pleasure and instruction in considering the manner of their formation, and contemplating the immense lapses of time and the enormous expenditures of life involved in their history.

For, if there had been no living things on the earth during all those aeons of slow progress in the shaping

British May Adopt Army School Plan

Cologne, Aug. 12.—Inspection of the vocational and educational school system of the American army as conducted by the Army of Occupation this spring is being made by the British War Ministry with a view of adopting certain features for the training of the troops of Great Britain. Several British officers arrived in Cologne recently from London on their way to Cologne to confer with the general staff officers of the American Forces in Germany.

SAYS HE WAS ATTACKED BY PREHISTORIC BEAST

London—Baron Ivan Levey describes an encounter with a prehistoric moa in the wilds of North Island, New Zealand. He was attacked, says Levey, by a fourteen-foot moa. Its color was light brown and its body huge and bulky. There were no signs of wings; the legs were disproportionately massive, almost elephantine, and the three-toed feet were "simply ponderous." A small head rested on a long, ostrich-like neck. The moa, says Levey, uttered a deep, booming noise.

How Old Are You By Your Hair?

You may be thirty in years, but if you are bald-headed, gray, or your hair is dry, brittle, scraggly and ugly-looking, people will surely take you to be many years older.

When your hair becomes faded, dry, streaked and scraggly when it falls out badly and new hair cannot grow, the roots should be immediately vitalized and properly nourished. To do this quickly, safely and at little expense, there is nothing so effective as Parilian Sage (liquid form), which you can get at Kennedy's Drug Store and all good drug and toilet counters.

It's guaranteed to abolish dandruff—stop scalp itch and itching hair and promote a new growth of money refunded. It's in great demand by discriminating women because it makes the hair so soft, lustrous, easy to manage, and free of and appear heavier than it really is.

A massage with Parilian Sage is a real delight—easy to use, not sticky or greasy, and delicately perfumed—an antiseptic liquid free from dangerous ingredients and guaranteed not to color the hair or scalp. If you want good-looking hair and plenty of it, by all means use Parilian Sage—a little attention now insures beautiful hair for years to come.
