look at her again till about the day after that. 'Oh, I can guess,' I replied with equanimity that surprised part of me. 'It was about the family you'd married into—and one alliance with that bourgeois bunch being enough. But I'll forgive poor Jeanie for her blindness, if only you'll forgive her.'...

LITTLE TALKS BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX

If you happen to be one of those girls who write to me under the signature of "Heartbroken," "Despondent" or "Despairing" make up your mind that you are extremely unlikely to find happiness if you write yourself down in these unhappy terms. 'Thoughts are things,' as wise men have known from the beginning, and if you admit you are "Heartbroken," "Despondent" or "Despairing," and tag yourself with these labels, you are deliberately playing a losing game—and writing your own death warrant. Do not let your feelings "run away with you." If you indulge in this sort of emotional spree you will have no more control over your destiny than a leaf has over its whirling in a hurricane. If you are at the beck and call of every feeling of joy, grief, love, fear, hate, you become emotionally intoxicated; nothing appears to you at its face value. In this state of mind one is utterly unfit to cope with the vicissitudes of life. As a result, misadventures appear in the sequence of events which present to the drug addict; nothing is real. The emotions get the whip hand and they scourge their victim from pillar to post. He is "madly" in love with this one or that, an enemy seeks to destroy his good name or his complete understanding with a friend, the world is against him, and very naturally he is "heartbroken," despondent and despairing. Many young people pass the entire period of adolescence in these states of exaltation or despairing unreality and they fall in love, run the gamut of emotional sensations, recover, then repeat the operation with the next young man or woman with whom fate happens to throw them. Fail to Make a Success It is needless to say such people are too much at the mercy of their feelings ever to make a success of life. They never stick to anything or any one long enough to succeed. Some grand opera emotion—love, despair, hate, fear, jealousy, suspicion is always driving them along; they never stop long enough to take deep root. How does it come about, why is every day life full of these "stars" whose glitter spoils the tranquility of domestic life? It is a question which this subject the other day with a brilliant physician—a specialist in diseases of the mind—who is doing notable work among the shellshock victims of the war. His theory is that such people have a certain amount of histrionic artistic ability and that they continually "live in parts." Such people are apt to be excessive novel readers, theatergoers, or "movie fans" and they fit their lives to stage, book or screen, rather than reverse the process and let it stage, book or screen to real life. They think in terms of art and frequently in the third person. The physician asked her innumerable questions about the young man, questions intended to elicit her real feelings in regard to him. She confessed he was "stingy," that he was "poorly educated," that she hated "his habit of breathing through the mouth." Love was not blind, in fact, there was no love present to lose his eyesight. She was in the mood of play-act and she took this rather sorry specimen for her "leading man." With such subjects the curtain never comes down; they get up in the morning and begin to think of themselves in the terms of a book or play and they keep it up till night. Now this gift, if it is big enough, and accompanied by dogged industry, may be turned to profitable account. It may come forth in the shape of novels, short stories, plays or movies. And you may have the pleasure of banking checks of your own making and becoming a happy and prosperous author. But if you are going to allow your life energies to become inextricably entangled in its meshes—you will have no more chance than a fly in a spider's web. You may cast yourself for a star but you will be apt to find yourself among the lowliest and most wretched of life's supers. Be Your Own Stage Manager If you have a dramatic temperament, pull yourself up with a sharp job and decide to become a good, business-like stage manager, as well as the emotional star advertised to weep real tears every day in the week and twice on matinee days. Keep the whip hand on your feelings and do not indulge in sentiments like this: "If he does not come this evening I shall die." "If he does not care for me it means someone has been making trouble between us." "I can't bear this agony another moment." On the contrary, say: "I've got a dramatic temperament, a highly valuable asset, but I am I am and I train it so that it may be of some practical account." Or "How can I prevent my emotions from running away with me, and making me a burden to myself and a laughing stock of others?" and when you have discovered that, my dear young man or woman, you have discovered the philosopher's stone. At the same time, your chances of "winning" the "only girl" or the "only man" who causes you such tremendous upheavals, at the present time, will be several times as good as if you continue to remain the victim of every emotional storm. Run your own life, and run it with your hand on the throttle. Life may be less "interesting" on these terms, but it will be a far more satisfactory and profitable affair than if you spend it at the beck and call of your grand opera emotion. Life's Problems Are Discussed

BY MRS. WILSON WOODROW "I listen and wonder," said a woman to me the other day, "wonder at the speaking voices and the intonations of the young people of today. They are supposed to have been through school or college, yet not one in ten knows how to speak the English language with grace or charm. What are they thinking of? Why are they not using the best gift of nature in the finest way? Do they not realize that a cultivated voice is the best expression and accent one can give of one's self, and the greatest of social assets?" My thoughts immediately ran back to the days of my girlhood, when my imagination was captured by tales I had heard of the fascinations of a woman who numbered many of the great and famous among her suitors. At last a day came when I was invited to her home. I shall never forget my shock of surprise at seeing her. She was plain, almost ugly. I must have shown my feelings in my face, for she looked at me with a mocking sort of smile as if to say: "Don't value your youth and prettiness too highly. What are they but mere possessions?" And then I heard her voice, and got my first realization of what charm really means. That perfect speech! It was music and color; there was a sort of make about it. I doubt if there is any gift comparable to a lovely speaking voice. In more than one instance I have seen ugly women queen it over the loveliest princess by right of that one divine possession; and men of humble station have risen to power through it alone. Nothing has so much influence with the multitude as a voice. I was talking with a girl a day or two ago so exquisitely pretty that she made one think of a fairy-tale princess. But when she opened her mouth pearls and diamonds certainly did not issue therefrom; rather, came words and snakes. The voice with which she assailed the ears of her hearers was a sort of cross between a twang and a whine. And there was a French woman, present whose methods of speech were such a study to the advantage with its perfect setting of the mouth to the words, which gave beauty and charm to her every expression. Many actors and actresses understand this, and many do not. It seemed to me this last winter that there was scarcely a play which I attended where there was not at least one "renoid" Adelle occupying an important role. Supreme actress that she is, Bernhard could never have achieved her almost legendary fame had her "golden" voice been faultless. Julia Marlowe and Ethel Barrymore have rich, powerful, lovely voices, and many an actor has forged his way to the front of his profession solely through the magic of a voice musical and resonant as the tones of a cello. Orators know the potency of the human voice and study the secret of its uses. Charles James Fox, that great English statesman, is said to

INJURED ON MOUNTAIN Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 15.—Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Harden and Mr. and Mrs. Metzler, of Baltimore, were injured, all of them being cut and bruised, when their automobile turned over rounding a curve on the National Pike between Braddock Heights and Middletown while crossing the South Mountain. "BAYER CROSS" ON GENUINE ASPIRIN Bayer Tablets of Aspirin to be genuine must be marked with the safety "Bayer Cross." Advice to the Lovelorn WANT HER TO TAKE LUNCH WITH THEM DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am employed in the office of a large firm, and in the work I meet a number of the men who work here. They are most all married, and are always looking for a girl to lunch with. I have asked me to go to lunch, but I have always refused because I do not think that is the right thing to do. I was telling a girl friend about it, and she said that I was very foolish not to go out to lunch with them, as they would think I was what is usually called a "snob."

LORRAINE I think you are entirely right in not accepting invitations to take lunch with these men who work with you. It is always best for a girl to keep her business and society separate, particularly in the case of married men. I am sure you will find you will get along much better if you do not deviate from this rule.

WHO SHOULD TAKE HER HOME DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: Lots of young girls and have lots of friends. The other evening a young man took us to a supper dance. While there a young man, who used to go about with my girl friend, asked me to go home and see her. He asked her to go home and see her. He asked her to go home and see her. He asked her to go home and see her.

MARRIED AT PARSONAGE Columbia, Pa., Aug. 15.—Edward C. Billett, of Columbia, and Miss Anna M. Wright, of Lancaster, were married yesterday at the parsonage of St. John's Lutheran church, by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. A. M. Mehrkam. They left after the ceremony to spend their honeymoon in Atlantic City.

She did not really "care" about the young man from whom she had just parted, though she had deluded herself into thinking she was "mad" about him, and was "heartbroken" that he had said her no goodby to her and had declined her invitation to spend the evening in her company. The physician asked her innumerable questions about the young man, questions intended to elicit her real feelings in regard to him. She confessed he was "stingy," that he was "poorly educated," that she hated "his habit of breathing through the mouth."

Time to Knit and Chat Awhile IT NEVER pays to waste time, money or energy. When you bake your own bread, you waste all three. Save the baking hours from the kitchen and invest them in more wholesome work elsewhere. Give some thought to youth and looks, and let the baker shoulder your baking worries. It doesn't worry him—that's his business. He can do it better and for less than you can. Be modern, buy GUNZENHAUSER'S AMERICAN-MAID BREAD and get a bread that is just right—crisp, wholesome, appetizing, nutritious. Sealed at the oven in dust-proof wrapper, it's clean. "American Maid" is a new bread from a new recipe, not just a new name—and about the best you ever tasted. Ask for it one time—and you'll demand it afterwards.
