"When a Girl Marries"

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCLXXX.
Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Lane Cosby himself opened the door of his apartment in answer to my ring. On seeing me his drawn face smoothed itself out and then fell into new lines—those of smiling welcome. He seized my hand in his and cried in a choked voice:

"Little Anne! Bless your heart—this is good of you. I knew you'd come straight off."

As he spoke he drew me into the big studio livingroom and led me over to the great window seat, where he sat at my side, patting and stroking my hand with the absent-minded air of needing something to cling to. As soon as I decently could I drew away from the awkward gestures of his big brown paw and asked soothingly:

"What is it, Lane? Breakers ahead? You know you can count on Jim and me whenever you need us."

"It's that Mason woman," groaned Lane. "She started talking. I met that West chap Jim bought out of the firm to-day and his darn insolence told me he knew something. All I got out of him was that he'd been spending a week-end at Atlantic City and that Evvy Mason was there. But I can add two and two as well as the next fellow. How are we going to stop her, Anne?"

"We aren't," I said judiciously. "But we aren't going to pay a bit of attention to a word she says, one worth while will listen to her and a man like Dick West isn't important socially, or in any other way. All you have to do is to keep up your nerve, Lane. A few true

Bringing Up Father

I'D LIKE TO GO FISHIN' TODAY BUT I KNOW MAGGIE WILL KICK—I'LL ASK HER ANYWAY.

HOW DARE YOU SPEAK OF FISHING—IT'S VULGAR—WHAT WOULD SOCIETY THINK IF THEY SAW YOU GOING FISHING?

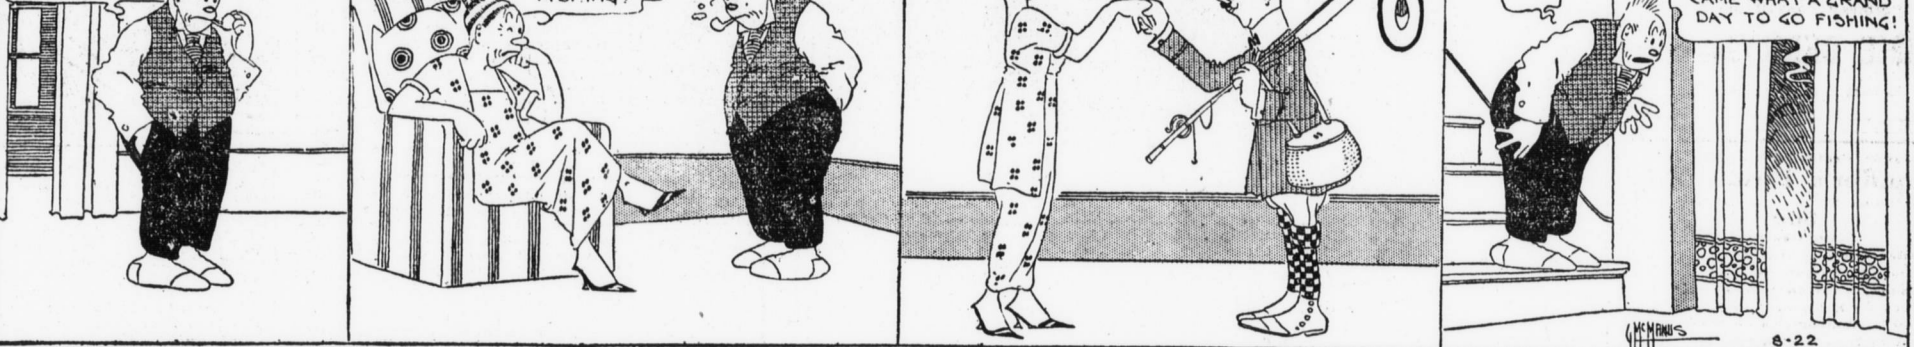

HAS SOCIETY STARTED TO THINK?

OH, DUKE—I'M SO GLAD TO SEE YOU.

I'M GOING FISHING AND I WONDERED IF MR. JIGGS WOULD CARE TO GO.

OH, I KNOW HE'LL BE DELIGHTED TO GO—I WAS JUST TELLING HIM BEFORE YOU CAME WHAT A GRAND DAY TO GO FISHING!

Jim and Tom that I was on my way. Val smiled with lifted brows. Her manner held me off until an discussion of the subject for which Lane had summoned me.

The taxi came before he had succeeded in getting Tom's telephone to answer. I started at once. At Tom's door I dismissed my taxi and hurried up the steps eagerly. But rang the bell vainly for a minute or two. Then his old housekeeper appeared, and told me that she'd been struggling for three-quarters of an hour to locate me by telephone, since Mr. Tom and my husband had been compelled to hurry on to the Walgrave and wanted me to join them there.

"Oh, dear!" I said wearily. "I've been on my husband's trail for almost two hours. Are you sure I'll find him at the hotel?"

"Surely, dearie. I'd insist on your riding in and having a bite with an old woman. I'd a cup of tea, first brace you up."

"I'd better not stop. But thank you just the same. There's a taxi now. I'll run for it," I cried hailing a passing cab eagerly. "Good-bye."

The door closed and I ran down the long flight of brown sandstone steps to the taxi I had summoned. As I got to the last step my ankle turned under me with a tearing wrenching stab of pain. Everything went black for a minute and a feeling of horrible illness assailed me. I sank down on the lowest step and the driver—his face rigidly sympathetic—summoned me. When the Bread is Right—the Meal is Right

BACK in war days, war bread was a patriotic duty. We ate it dutifully. But it taught us a lesson. We learned that bad bread spoiled a good meal. We learned that a substitute cannot take the place of the genuine.

GUNZENHAUSER'S AMERICAN-MAID BREAD

She orders it by name, so that no other bread is substituted for it, and looks at the wrapper to be sure about it. She knows that it is clean, crisp, wholesome, dainty, appetizing. She knows that it is perfectly made, baked, handled.

Fine Food for Old and Young

THE little folks are excellent judges of good things. Their taste is a natural one and not cultivated. That is the reason they are so fond of crisp, brown Jersey Corn Flakes. And you can't fool grandfathers. He chooses food which is both appetizing and nourishing.
