Critical Coal Condition Due to Labor Shortage

THE last reports of the United States Geological Survey indicate that the average daily production of coal is running considerably behind the production of last year. We cannot see any possibility of a surplus of coal, for the following reasons:

Department of Public Instruction for administering the new law . For months the officers of the de-partment have been studying the sal-ary increase problem and since ap-proval of the act of the last Legisla-ture the subject has been considered from many angles and in the light of the financial condition of various dis-tricts. The department has also issued a statement ruling that all one-room schools situated outside of cities are to be considered as "tural." In a statement issued by the depart-men to-day for guidance of school offi-cials and boards of directors the fol-lowing definitions and rulings are made. together with information on what the State appropriates and who is to bene-fit under the new law:

RAISE AVERTS STRIKE By Associated Press. Allentown, Pa., Aug. 23.—A threatened strike of the motormen, conductors and trackmen of the Allentown and Reading Traction Company was averted to-day when the men were given a raise of three cents an hour. An advance of seven cents had been demanded. Train-men now receive thirty-six cents an hour and trackmen thirty-two.

During the early part of the year, when the mines were only running a small part of their capacity, many laborers left the field and went into other lines of industrial activities. A great many others, since the signing of the armistice, have secured passports to return to European countries and the total number of coal miners who have left our shores is estimated at about 40,000, with the number increasing every day.

It is next to impossible to get native American labor to work in anthracite coal mines. With thousands of coal miners leaving monthly, who will produce coal for us next winter, when the demand becomes insistent?

The outlook is not cheerful, particularly when it is remembered that there is more than likely to be car shortage during the crop-moving period.

The next advance in coal prices will be in September. No one knows how many more advances will be put into effect before April, 1920.
