"When a Girl Marries"

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CLXXXVII.
Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.

"Look who's here!" cried a jovial voice, and Tom Mason came to a full stop at the table where our party of four had just finished dining. "I'm meeting Pat whenever the old chap decides to arrive. Now you were to ask me to draw up a chair and consume a breaker of foaming ginger ale, it would give me a pleasant opportunity to tell Miss Phoebe how well she's looking."

Jim flashed a quick, keen glance from Phoebe to Nea, and back again before he replied to Evelyn Mason's cousin. In the tiny interval before Jim spoke, Tom leaned down and murmured in his usual pseudo-devoted manner:

"And to tell Donna Anna that she's lovelier than ever."

Then Jim's voice overrode Tom's whisper with a cordial:

"Draw up and sit down, Tommie my lad."

Tom assented readily and made a great point of offering his good wishes to Phoebe and Nea with cordiality and a certain easy ignoring of the past. All this displayed the versatility of good breeding and made me realize again that family does count. These Masons and Harrisons weren't a bit better than simple folk like Carl and Daisy and me—but tradition and training have given them an unreservingly and we have to dig out for ourselves. And I, for one, don't always know where to dig.

We were all on excellent terms by the time Pat arrived—and then things took a turn for the even more chummy and cheerful. The three men like each other and my younger brother unreservedly and sincerely—that made for cordiality. They knew each other well—that made for an easy flow of good-natured banter. But handsome, silver-haired Pat, of the daredevil eyes and bitter mouth, turned suddenly tender and sweet and grave whenever he spoke to Phoebe. He admired his manner. And it made Nea very proud. So we were all in a mood to "just love" each other and to feel ready to tell whomsoever it might concern that all was right with the world.

Into our gaiety there came a sudden noticeable hush—the air grew still and heavy, and a great zigzag of lightning followed a clap of thunder, and was followed in turn by a sudden polka-dotted of rain.

Pat flung back his gray head and ran his hand across his forehead in the well-remembered gesture.

"Scoury for under, girls! We'll join you in a minute," said Phoebe and I obeyed. The men followed in a moment.

CATARRH
Is a Constant Menace to You

This disgusting and loathsome trouble does lead to some of the gravest, most serious and dangerous diseases. Too often it is considered only a trivial thing and treatment postponed or neglected. Every day the sad effect of this neglect is witnessed by the many thousands, who constantly suffer from Headaches and Headnoises; Throat and Bronchial Trouble; habitual Hawking and Spitting; constantly troubled with Colds in the Head; or chronic diseases of the Lungs, Stomach, etc.

Possibly you have neglected taking treatment because of the lack of any convenient and efficacious remedy. This lack is now most successfully overcome by the MANHILL AUTOMATIC INHALER. All diseases of the Nose, Throat or Lungs, which in some cases have been chronic for from 30 to 40 years, are being treated with astonishing success by this wonderful new discovery and invention. The Man-Hill will afford you prompt relief and at a very small cost. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. Relief is positively guaranteed or your money refunded. Call today and learn all about the merit of this remarkable new discovery and invention, now being introduced and demonstrated at George A. Morgan's drug store, 16 North Third street.—Adv.

THE LOVE GAMBLER

CHAPTER 30.

Walter Jefferson's statement that the largest letter in a monogram stands for the last name might or might not be true. Helen Goddard accepted it as truth.

"Oh," she said, agitatedly, "then I have been right all along!"

"In what respect?" her companion queried. "What do you know about this fellow?"

"Nothing, really," she admitted. "But from the first moment I met him I was taken by his looks. I knew he was a gentleman. I have a lot of intuition, and I saw that he was far above the average man. I think that Desiree must guess it, too—although she will not confess it. Nobody could be with him for five minutes and not see that he is a thoroughbred. What's the matter?"

For a disagreeable smile had come to the listener's lips. He was a vain man. Not only was it unpleasant to hear another fellow praised so raptuously, but it was

LIFE'S PROBLEMS ARE DISCUSSED
By MRS. WILSON WOODROW

I was with a woman the other day who had been given the opportunity of suggesting some one for a very desirable and remunerative position. She was really anxious to do so, and as she ran over a list of her friends and acquaintances to decide their eligibility this is the way she checked them off:

"I would like Mary X. to have that place. She really needs it badly, but how can I advise it? You never can depend on her. She would be all right for two or three weeks, and then her enthusiasm would ooze out and she would get tired and lazy and lie down on the job."

"Then there's Bessie Y. But she is so high-strung that she keeps every one about her on a nervous strain. She would have the whole establishment by the ears."

"Julia Z. might do. She will work hard, but she's so unsystematic that everything would be at sixes and sevens. They would never put up with her disorderly methods, and if any one says a word to her she bursts into tears."

So she went through the whole list. Perhaps she was unnecessarily particular; but if the person she recommended proved unsatisfactory she would get the blame, and she did not care to take any risks. Consequently, she did not put forward a candidate.

These women on her list had no idea that they were being weighed in the balance and found wanting. If they had they would have been very much chagrined and would probably never have forgiven her. But, after all, it was not she alone who was judging them; they were in a sense condemning themselves.

They were all anxious to skim the cream from life's milk-crocks, but they were either too vain to recognize their faults or they wouldn't take the bother to discipline themselves. And, although they might not be aware of it, Life was doing it for them. For Life is a very thorough disciplinarian.

Many girls write to me to this effect. "I don't like my job. It has no future in it, and I am dead tired of it. They only reason I stay is because I need the money."

If we didn't all need the money those of us born in tropical climates would probably still be sitting comfortably in our skins and eating coconuts and bananas, and those of us in northern latitudes would be getting ourselves into bears' skins, after pushing the bears out of their coats, and sitting down to a nice meal of raw fish and whale's blubber.

It is not idealism that drives us to toil; it is the stern need for food, shelter, clothing and a little jam on our bread and butter.

But what in the last analysis is

Aviator Frightens Farmer by Flying Low; Fined $25
Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 30.—On a charge of flying his airplane within ten feet of the roof of a farmer's house, Charles H. Levy was fined $25 and costs for disturbing the peace, in a justice court at DeLeon, Mo., yesterday.

The complainant, farmer who lives near an aviation field, asserted that the aviator had scared his family and frightened his stock. While it was admitted no law on the statutes covered the case, Justice S. I. Farmer declared it was his opinion of the farmer and his family.

Levy will appeal.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By MRS. WILSON WOODROW

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am engaged to a young man traveling with a recruiting party. The other evening a young man asked me if he could take me to the "movies." I really like him as a friend but I love my future husband dearly. Would it be alright if I went with him?

WAITING: This is a question that can be settled by your own conscience. If you think the man to whom you are engaged is perfectly willing that you should have pleasure when he is not at home there is certainly no harm in it. On the other hand your future husband is hardly so selfish that he would care if you would have innocent pleasure when he is unable to give it to you. As long as you can be free and open in your actions, be assured they are alright.

Senators Appeal For Ban on Ludendorff Story

Washington, Aug. 30.—American newspapers were appealed to yesterday by Senator Chamberlain, Democrat, of Oregon, not to publish the story of the war written by General Ludendorff, quartermaster general of the German army. Senator Chamberlain told the Senate that several newspapers had announced that they would publish it.

"I hope the newspapers," he said, "will, without any Act of Congress, decline absolutely to print this story of the German general largely responsible for the kind of warfare conducted by Germany."

"I, too, trust it will not be done," interjected Senator Lodge, Republican, of Massachusetts.

them. The tiresome job gives you a chance to exercise some of those unused and latent faculties. Look it over carefully, burnish it up, clean it, oil it, and see if it won't run better. See if it can't be improved; and in trying to do something for it you will be doing something for yourself. There is sure to be someone, quite unsuspected by you, who is watching your efforts and noting your improvement, and who may, either now or in the future, be able to say a good word for you or to offer you another stepping-stone.
