"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCLXXXIX
Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.

A minute after I had asked Daisy to drop in when her day at the office was finished I regretted the impulse which had swept me to the telephone. I recognized it for just what it was—my own fondness for playing the role of "Fairy Godmother" as I call it, or "Mrs. Fix-It" to quote Jim.

I had been displeased by the cavalier way in which Carl Booth called off his dinner engagement with Daisy when he discovered that Jim and I couldn't come. I felt that it wasn't fair to Daisy, who might reasonably expect him to keep his engagement with her. And when Carl insisted on running in to see how I was feeling I almost automatically proceeded to arrange to have Daisy here, too.

But now that I had let myself in for the situation, I didn't see what I was going to do with it.

Carl arrived first—was not what I'd been counting on. He brought an enormous box of peonies that I felt had been obtained by false representations. "They're wonderful!" I exclaimed. "But I've no right to them or the consideration you showed in postponing your party. I might have managed to hobble out. I did last night."

"All the more reason why you should take it easy and let the ankle rest to-day. You always were a little brick about grinning and bearing things, Barbara Anne. Do be careful of yourself now. I hate to think of your suffering."

I made a little move to cover my own consciousness that Carl was being melodramatic about a trifle, a tendency he'd never shown in the old days.

"I'm making a fuss now and about nothing," I said airily. "If I were still a poor working girl I'd be hollering daily to my job. But I'm a pampered darling."

"I'm glad he's so good to you," said Carl, with unnecessary emphasis and then a pert little voice interrupted as Daisy appeared hesitatingly in the doorway.

"Once a darling, always a darling," she said, with a seeming inconsequence that told me nevertheless that she'd been listening for a minute or so. "Do I intrude?" The maid, who said with a grin, "Daisy's face was flushed and her usually dull eyes were alight. She looked excited, and her momentary color gave her a vividness that was almost beautiful. Then she faded again to her usual drab tans, which were further accented by the yellow lining of her dress. Yellow seemed to be Daisy's favorite color, and nothing could have been less becoming.

"Please come right in and find yourself the sort of chair that will make you want to settle down for a real visit," I said, wondering if I had dreamed the flash of annoyance that seemed to dart across Carl's face.

"I think I'll stay until your handsome husband comes home, anyway," replied Daisy with a toss of her head.

Our conversation jerked and creaked along for the next half hour. Daisy was alternately sulky and insolent. Her air of indifference to Carl's existence was overdone and he was obviously annoyed either by it or by her. The less pleased Carl appeared, the more Daisy swept herself along into her awkward efforts to impress him with the idea that he didn't matter the least in the world to her. Her ungraciousness and sullenness filled me with vague pity for a time. Then they began to make me uneasy, to bore and annoy. Her soggy sullenness seemed to hold a threat and a menace. I made up my mind that I would discontinue my misdirected efforts to help this dull and malicious little grain of dust.

I might have carried out my plan. But the new ice-chest which occurred which made it necessary for me to keep Daisy Condon in my life whether I wanted her there or not.

Exuding well-being and delight, Jim walked into the room. As he greeted the visitors he laid a little white box on the console table standing between the windows. And Daisy, who seemed bound to do every awkward, ill-bred thing in the calendar, cried with a telling glance at Jim.

"Oh, that looks just like a ring box! Have you brought any one a present, Mr. Harrison?"

"That," said Jim with careless insolence, "is our new ice chest."

Carl flashed a glance at Daisy which said Jim had served her just right. Daisy turned an ugly, bricked and fairly squirmed. In a moment I was sorry for her again, so to relieve the tension I said:

"Let's see the new ice-chest, Jim."

"Oh, wait till later," he replied in a tone clearly suggesting his real meaning. "Wait till we're alone."

But I caught his eyes and conveyed my insistence by a glance, and Jim rose and brought me the little white box, standing awkwardly on my side while I unwrapped and opened it. Then I gasped and wished that I had waited until we were alone. For lying on a bed of pearls was the first gift of jewelry Jim had brought me since our marriage—an exquisite pearl with a pale pink luster that lighted its creamy smoothness. The pearl was set in a rim of platinum which held the pearl.

"Oh, that's lovely!" I cried stirred almost to tears. "Jim! Dear—it's so lovely!"

Our eyes met and clung. There was no need of words. Then almost as if my glance was pried from his and summoned to meet hers, I found myself staring into Daisy's pale, dark-lashed eyes. For a moment their expression puzzled me. Then I read it clearly and plainly. It held two things—envy, bitter, burning envy—and hatred.

I glanced down at the wonderful jewel on my finger. Daisy's yearly salary would not pay for it.

When I turned to the girl again, she was staring at her own ringless fingers.

HOPE FOR ACTION ON NEW HOSPITAL

Wish Expressed That City and County Will Get Together Soon

Before the conference of the State Health officials, the directors of the Chamber of Commerce, the city and county commissioners and the city and county solicitors dispersed at the Harrisburg Club yesterday, William Jennings, who presided, expressed the hope that the city and county officials would determine the question of the contagious disease hospital in the near future.

Thomas W. Jackson, assistant to Health Commissioner Martin, outlined in a practical address the necessity for such a hospital and indicated the desire of the health authorities of the State to make Harrisburg an ideal community from the health standpoint. He discussed in brief way the character of the building required, its location, the necessary capacity, the class of cases to be taken in and other details.

Colonel John L. McLean, deputy commissioner of health, still further emphasized the making of Harrisburg a model city in provisions for the health of the people as an example for the rest of the State.

Charles A. Emerson, Jr., chief engineer of the State Health Department, submitted a plan and design for the contemplated hospital here and pointed out that it could be erected in units and wings added as needed in the future. His plan provides for a fireproof building and a site near the Almshouse is believed to be ideal for the purpose.

County Commissioner Wells pledged the support of the Board of County Commissioners in any plan of co-operation which might be adopted and there was a general feeling throughout the conference that a definite decision would be reached in the near future.

The report submitted at the conference suggests adequate provision should be made for private cases, where patients may be treated by their own physicians, who should be required, of course, to comply with all rules and regulations of the institution. This would be a source of revenue and an aid to maintenance and would serve to prevent the use of the objectionable term "almshouse hospital."

The blueprint plan submitted is for a 200-bed hospital and the estimated cost $200,000 is for a hospital of that size. It is believed, however, that a smaller institution, for say 100 patients would serve the present purpose of Harrisburg and Dauphin county, and that one wing of the hospital as planned, extending to, but not including the central portion of the building, could be omitted for the present and added later as the necessity for more rooms arises. It is estimated that this omission would reduce the cost of construction by at least one-third of the estimated amount.

GRACE CHURCH TO HAVE GOOD MUSIC

New Choirmaster Preparing Vested Choir For Organ Dedication Service

Bernard R. Mausert, of New York, newly appointed organist and choir-master of Grace Methodist Church, who recently arrived in this city will begin his work of organizing a large vested choir at once. As before, the choir will be assisted by a solo quartet. The magnificent organ, which is to be installed in the church, will not be ready for use for at least another month, but in the meantime, the new organist hopes to bring up the chorus to a standard in keeping with the possibilities of the great instrument and the other aims of the wide-awake church organization.

All former members of the choir, as nearly as possible, are being notified of the resumption of activities and are requested to meet for rehearsal on Saturday evening of this week at 7:30 at the church. Plans will be outlined and a permanent organization formed. Rendition of well known notable cantatas and special musical services will be a feature of the choir's work.

An invitation has been extended to young singers of the city, as well as to those more experienced, to become affiliates with what promises to be one of the leading choirs of the city. Mr. Mausert has had a wide and successful experience in the training of choirs and it is expected that the music of Grace Church will become an increasingly attractive feature of the highly interesting and devotional services of this church.

As Mr. Mausert has as yet no permanent address, applications for the new choir may be mailed to him to P. O. Box 1255, city. Male voices in particular are desired.

AUTO LICENSE IS REVOKED

Pittsburgh Man Ran a Jitney Without Approval by State Officers

The first revocation of an automobile license by the State Highway Commissioner on recommendation of the Public Service Commission was made to-day on John F. Bock, Pittsburgh, who was found by the Commissioner to have been operating a car as a common carrier, without approval of the Commission. The license recalled were 190,763 and 276,984. The authority for the revocation is conferred by the act of July 9, 1919. The department has also revoked several licenses secured through misrepresentation of age, while in another case repeated violations of automobile regulations caused revocation. There have been more than 22,000 licenses issued since the act of July 9, 1919.

E. J. Boyle, of Wilkes-Barre, to-day made formal complaint before the Public Service Commission that the Wilkes-Barre Company, of Wilkes-Barre, was advertising sale of $300,000 of stock on representation that it had been approved by the Public Service Commission. He charged that the Commission had never approved it and that it was a misrepresentation.

At the office of the Commission it was stated that the company had filed notice of the proposed issue.

H. E. Fleming, of Erie, complained that the Home Heating Company, Erie, had failed to extend service.

Dr. Thomas E. Finegan, State superintendent of public instruction, returned to the Capitol to-day after an extended stay in the State during his vacation during which he studied the rural school problems. Dr. Finegan will take up matters relative to the State education system as soon as he clears up his correspondence.

The Adjutant General's Department today announced that because of failure to file the Federal oath the Federal recognition had been withdrawn from these officers of the 101st Airborne Division: Major Allan W. Urison, Lieutenants Blaine Aiken, Thomas G. Samworth and Charles A. Martin.

The Pennsylvania Railroad to-day paid the State Treasury $215,000 as State tax on gross receipts, the largest payment of the kind in years.

Hearings were held by Public Service Commissioners to-day on the protest against the increased rate of fare on the North Branch Transit Company operating in the Danville-Bloomsburg district and on a complaint that the Metropolitan Edison Electric Company, of Reading, had refused to extend electric service in the Palmyra-Anville district. Application for incorporation of a dozen electric companies in Jefferson county to be part of a large system in that district. No opposition was made.

Governor Sproul, who is speaking at Danville's homecoming this afternoon is expected here to-night.

The contract for lighting of Dauphin borough for five years was submitted to the Public Service Commission for approval to-day.

Commissioner of Fisheries, N. R. Buller, has returned from a tour of hatcheries in northern counties.

Commissioner of Banking Fisher returned to the Capitol to-day after visits to institutions in western counties.

NEARLY READY TO CELEBRATE

New Cumberland on Edge For Coming Welcome to Soldiers

Plans are rapidly materializing in the preparation for New Cumberland's big welcome home celebration next Saturday. So as to make the affair the best possible, the general committee has issued a request asking that every home in the town and suburb display the national colors and follow out some scheme of decoration. The statement from the service men's committee in charge of plans for the day is that all is rounding into readiness for the big time. Decision has been reached as to the proper method to be employed in recognizing the soldier dead in line of parade. Attention is again called to the fact that the town's service men will meet in front of the New Cumberland National Bank at 12:45 p. m. of the day of the celebration. A personal appeal has gone out to every soldier and sailor on the town's honor roll, urging them to be present in uniform in the parade.

Among the many organizations planning for the day, the Citizens' Hose Company is probably foremost. Harry Hummel has been chosen as their marshal. They have already placed four huge pillars to the front of the fire house about which will be erected a handsome welcome home arch.

The decorative committee which has the general decoration for the town in charge became quite active last evening in starting to put up many of the decorations which have been purchased for the occasion. Some weeks ago the town, by voluntary contribution, raised $1,000 to be used in putting this celebration "over the top." As the time approaches for the occasion there is every evidence that the money is being wisely and judiciously spent.

Excepting the parade, the big drawing card will be the baseball game between the Klein Chocolate Co. and Williamsport. Many fans made it a point to see the Klein team play against Cincinnati on the island last Friday. Since seeing their best playing in that game there is no doubt that there will be a big crowd present at the game in New Cumberland on Saturday. It will also be remembered that this game is to be the deciding one of a series of three games, each team having already won one from their opponents.

The baseball park will be placed the parade will disband and as soon as the marchers find seats the game will start. The time is set for 3 p. m.

The bandstand in the square has already been decorated and will be occupied by the evening by the one-hundred piece Spring Garden Band of York. A splendid program for the evening concert has been arranged.

Grocers Lay Blame on Farmers For High Costs
Philadelphia, Sept. 3.—Philadelphia wholesale grocers, at a meeting yesterday to discuss the high cost of living, asserted that farmers' organizations are one of the chief causes of high food prices.

Through the action of Congress in exempting them from antitrust laws, it was said, these organizations have assumed the proportions of trusts of the worst sort and fix prices arbitrarily. As an example of what they said farmers' organizations are doing, the California association of raisin growers, that has boosted the producer's price of raisins 15 cents a pound, was cited.

At the conclusion of the meeting the grocers authorized appointment of a committee of nine persons to go to Washington and assist the Federal Government in running down profiteers. The committee is empowered to spend all the money necessary in order to accomplish results.

About Alcohol in Hair Remedies

Every physician and chemist knows the antiseptic value of alcohol and also that practically every substance capable of benefiting the hair or scalp requires a suitable amount of alcohol as a solvent.

The doubling of the U. S. tax on alcohol ($4.18 per gal.) has caused a flood of watery hair preparations, the repeated use of which may cause harm unless followed by hot towels to stimulate the scalp.

Herculicide cannot be taken internally.
