friendship stuff," Jim cried. "The man's in love with you?"

"You think every man I meet outside of your own circle of intimates is in love with me?" I replied angrily, and then I crimsoned as it swept across my mind that even if Jim did think that of only evened-up for the days when I thought every woman I met was in love with him.

"Methinks the lady doth protest too much," Jim said, good naturedly pinching his cheek. "But the blush is so darn becoming that I don't blame 'em, even if I hate the mooning and sighing over my wife."

Just then Bertha announced dinner, and leaning on Jim's arm, I went out to the table. Hardly were we seated when I thought of my ring. Even if Jim, with a man's amusing lack of observation, had bought me a ring far too large for my finger, I wanted to wear it at our first meal after I came into possession of it. So I sent Bertha to the living room to bring the little white box from the table.

After a minute, she returned, carrying the box to her hand. As she held it out to me her hand began to tremble violently, and the box slipped from her shaking fingers to the floor. It opened and rolled to my very feet. Bertha stopped and recovered it, fitting the two parts together again. Then she put it on the table in front of me. Her face was flushed from stooping, but just when I looked up at her after a frozen minute or two, she had gone quite pale. I knew that my palooza outmatched hers.

The box was empty.

THE LOVE GAMBLER

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER LII
(Copyright, 1919, Star Company.)

Helen Goddard was actually frightened by the change that swept over the face of David Smith as she mentioned the missing pendant.

"For an instant she felt her trust in him wavering. If he was absolutely innocent, why should his eyes widen and blink?"

Then, as was her custom, she felt widely about in her mind for some honorable explanation of his conduct.

She found one almost immediately. Smith had heard that the pendant was missing, but until this moment it had not occurred to him that anybody could think that he was implicated in the affair. She had shocked at innocent man by this suggestion. She must hasten to reassure him. She was more certain than ever that he was innocent.

"David," she said, "I ought not to have mentioned the pendant to you. But you knew of it before—didn't you?"

He nodded without speaking.

"Well," she went on, "I spoke of it just to put you on your guard. Of course I was aware that you are absolutely innocent."

How strangely he behaved! He seemed actually stupid. Surely his manner and looks now proved that he was not guilty. A guilty man would have pretended that he had never before heard of the missing article.

"You see," she tried to explain, "Walter Jefferson said something tonight that surprised me a little. He said he had seen you somewhere before."

"His statement is perfectly true," David affirmed.

He was rapidly recovering the equanimity that had forsaken him when this girl mentioned the pendant that had belonged to his aunt. He had jumped to the conclusion that Jefferson had recognized him as David DeLaine, and had confided this discovery to Miss Goddard. In that case, Miss Goddard might remember that the person who had given Miss Leighton her handsome pendant was the aunt of David DeLaine. She had perhaps, referred to the bit of jewelry to lead David to betray his identity.

If so, all was over. He must leave his present position—might never again see the daughter of the man upon whom he had imposed all these weeks.

More Revelations

Helen was astounded at David's admission of past acquaintance with her informant.

"Oh, then you recall meeting Mr. Jefferson before?" she asked.

"Yes," David said. "He must talk naturally and as if he had no idea what she was driving at. 'I have seen him several times since I have been in Mr. Leighton's employ. Once he had jumped to the conclusion that I was David DeLaine, and he said that he was driving at me. He must have been in front of Carnegie Hall; the other time was on Fifth avenue when he intimated that it was my duty to enlist.'"

David congratulated himself as he saw that for the moment his listener's thoughts were diverted from his connection with the bit of jewelry to another matter that aroused her curiosity.

"He intimated that you should be in the service! But you were in?"

She paused, confused.

"Yes," he admitted, "I have been in the service. I only wish I had been able to stay until the signing of the armistice."

"Then you do not mind speaking of it?" she asked eagerly. "I was sure you would not, in spite of Walter's suggestion about your having to keep quiet about it."

"What?"

The ejaculation was so violent that Helen felt herself cringe.

"Nothing," she stammered, "only—only he—"

"He what?" David demanded, towering above her. "Tell me!"

A gleam of common sense made Helen Goddard suppress a part of what Walter had said.

"Oh—he only spoke as if you did not care to have it known that you had been in the service, and were out of it now—and I was just wondering how you happened to get out."

"I was wounded," David said dogmatically. "You may tell your informant that if he refers to my being again, I may add, in passing, that it is none of his business."

He refused to answer.

"Of course it is not David," Helen said soothingly. "And I would not have referred to the matter if you had not spoken of Walter Jefferson's reproving you for not having enlisted."

"What I started out to say was that Walter was sure he had seen you before he met you here in New York. He seemed to have an idea that he had seen you down in Baltimore."

"Averse as David DeLaine had heretofore been to talking of his experience in France, he now found that locality so much safer a topic than Baltimore that he wished he had to keep the conversation to the other side of the Atlantic.

But he must face facts, and let this girl say what was on her mind. "I have been in Baltimore in days gone by," he admitted. "Jefferson may have seen me there."

Sugar Shortages May Be Expected to Continue For Indefinite Time

Washington, Sept. 4.—Sugar shortages now experienced in many parts of the country cannot be relieved for some time, according to George A. Zabriskie, president of the United States Sugar Equalization Board, said, in a letter received today by Senator Hitchcock, Democrat, Nebraska.

"The demand is enormous and largely in excess of refiners' ability to supply it at this time," said Mr. Zabriskie. "Complaints regarding the sugar shortage come from all sections of the country and we fear it will be practically impossible to relieve the situation for some time to come."

Sugar from the best crops, Mr. Zabriskie added, is practically exhausted and shipments from the West Indies have been "seriously embarrassed" by the marine strike.

Pretty Morning Wedding in Derry Street Church

A pretty morning bridal was solemnized this morning at 9 o'clock at the Derry Street United Brethren Church when Miss Ruth Fasnacht became the bride of Robert Hartz, the Rev. J. A. Lyter officiating. The bridal party entered the church to the strains of the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin. Miss Violet Casselet played the wedding music.

The bride wore a beaded gown of white georgette with a white hat, she carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and trench flowers.

Miss Janet Sprinkle of York, was maid of honor. Her frisk was pink georgette with a large pink hat. Roy Fasnacht, a brother of the bride acted as best man.

The bride, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Fasnacht, of 24 North Fifteenth street, is a graduate of Millersville Normal School.

Mr. Hartz is a native of Palmyra. He graduated from Lebanon Valley College and has recently returned from France where he served as an aviator for 22 months. He is employed by the Bethlehem Steel Company, at Lebanon.

After a wedding breakfast at the home of the bride where autumn flowers and ferns were arranged in profusion, Mr. and Mrs. Hartz left for a wedding trip to Philadelphia and Washington. They will reside at Lebanon.

GIRLS! USE LEMONS FOR SUNBURN, TAN

Try it! Make this lemon lotion to whiten your tanned or freckled skin.

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, shake well and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion and complexion whiteners, at very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of Orchard White for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands and see how quickly the freckles, sunburn, windburn and tan disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.
